LAUNCELOT GRANGER

Natus 16 December, 1879. Obiit 10 April, 1890

THE solemn April days had scarcely sped, before I determined to commemorate the one who had come and so quickly gone, by picking up the links of life which bound the gentle child to the sturdy man whose honored name he bore, and, welding them into a chain, build a monument which should be enduring.

To the memory of my son, Launcelot Granger; an only child; an only grandchild; an only great-grandson, I most reverently and affectionately dedicate this volume.

PREFACE.

A work on genealogy is never perfect. The ever-changing course of life; the constant coming and going of human souls; the giving and taking in marriage, renders it beyond the power of any man to send out a book like this which will truly represent a great family precisely as it is at the moment of publication. There must necessarily be errors, and, at best, the labor can produce only a result which will be approximately correct.

The work which follows is the result of but two years' labor; too short, by far, for the task undertaken. It is said that not less than ten years are needed to produce such a history, and one well-known work was thirty-one years in the editor's hands. It is not claimed, therefore, that here is given more than a skeleton sketch of the Granger family; one which will, I hope, be filled out by some person with more time than I, until it shall be as full and complete as some of the many excellent works which grace the library shelves. What has been done will be of great help to one who would undertake the greater work, and will be a sound foundation upon which to build a larger structure.

The errors which will be found within these covers arise, to a remarkable extent, from the mistakes of those who reported their families. It is strange how people differ about their own lines. Children have disputed between themselves as to the date of birth or death of a beloved parent; men forget the day of their marriage; some take dates from tombstones (which are notoriously unreliable), while others confess they guess at dates, having no time to make a careful examination. Hence, many will find dates given with which they disagree. In all disputed instances the public records of town or church have been followed, when possible, and the conflicting claims ignored.

I cannot refrain from publicly thanking a few of the many to whom I am deeply indebted for assistance in the preparation of this volume. Without their efficient aid I should have been much longer at my task.

Dr. Karle H. Granger of Randolph, Mass., kindly undertook the collection of the names of the descendants of Capt. John Granger of New Braintree, Mass., and to him alone is due the credit for the excellent and full report presented of that line. Mrs. Louisa French of Burton, Ohio, in the most amiable manner, gave response to my many and repeated inquiries, with information about those whom she knew in the days of her youth, which could have been obtained from no other source. Mrs. Adeline Granger Vosburgh of Phelps, New York, with a graciousness pleasant to remember, gathered up many of the strings which led from the old home of Major Elihu and Pierce Granger, and, following them down to the present time, put me in direct communication with most of the descendants of those worthy men. Others, too, in number beyond the limits of this space to mention, gave efficient assistance to the work I had undertaken. To each and all most hearty and earnest thanks are extended.

CHAPTER I.

THE NAME OF GRANGER — CRESTS AND COAT OF ARMS.

The original nationality of the name of Granger is unmistakable. Arthur, in his "Derivation of Family Names," it is true, says that it is of Saxon origin, but this is unquestionably a mistake. Its very termination, er, places it at once in the catalogue of names introduced into Britain by the followers of William the Conqueror, or by those coming later from France. "The French names introduced at the conquest may be generally known by the prefixes or suffixes, er, etc."—Somers' "Family Nomenclature," page 52. It does not appear in English history prior to A. D. 1066; the names of W. de Grangers and S. de Grangers being found in Fox's copy (?) of the "Roll of Battle Abbey." Assuming this copy to be correct, this is the earliest record which can be found of the name of Grange, Granger, Grangers, Grainger, or Graunger in English history.

The word grange is clearly French, in ancient as well as modern use. Its primary meaning in Normandy and other parts of France was a granary or barn where grain was stored. Even now in modern French, its meaning is the same, while granger means, "one who holds a farm on condition of dividing with the proprietor the products of the soil;"* that is, paying his rent by dividing his crop with his landlord. Upon the first introduction of the word grange into England, it was applied to the farmhouse or homestead of the outlying fields or manor of some Abbey or Priory, and the bailiff who presided over one was called Ate Grange, and afterwards, Granger; that is, the man who had charge of a farm belonging to an Abbey or some great landlord either as tenant or servant, was called a Granger.

* Little's Dict. Langue Francaise.

As the word grange became anglicized, its application and meaning was enlarged, and it denoted also a tract of land on which grain was grown, or a large farm. The Grange would be distinguished from the castles and halls where the barons resided with their immediate attendants, and was applied to those outlying fields and tenements where resided the peasants and menial servitors who were engaged in tilling the soil. In Dauphiné, a farmer is still called a granger, and in France the grange is still a "part" of an estate.

At the time of the Conquest, neither in France nor England had surnames been adopted by any but the leading families. Indeed, although it is claimed by some that they were in use among the Anglo-Saxons, the proof is not clear, but in Normandy the names of their estates had been to a certain extent adopted by families of distinction. This name so taken, was not, however, always hereditary, but the practice had commenced, and grew with some speed. With the Conquest, the custom was introduced into England, and those who held lands there commenced to assume the name either of the place in Normandy from whence they came, or that in which they had settled. But for generations, whatever was done toward assuming hereditary names was confined to the upper classes, and hardly before the thirteenth century did it even begin to prevail among others. Only as the people began to rise gradually from the depths of serfdom, did the giving of surnames extend down through the social scale. Commoners, as well as peasants, were for hundreds of years known by a Christian name only, and if it was necessary to distinguish one John from another John, or one Francois from another Francois, some name connected with their residence, calling, or surrounding circumstances, was given by common consent. John the German, Phillip of Neuville, Peter the smith, would designate the nationality, place of birth, or trade of the man, sufficiently to distinguish him from others of the same name.

Many surnames appear, as I have said, in the thirteenth century, but confined almost exclusively to the upper classes. As late as 1381, they were not general among the lower classes, and the man who that year headed the famous uprising in London, and is known in history as Wat Tyler, was called Wat (Walter) the Tyler (Slater) from his trade. In 1406 a man describes himself as John the son of William the son of John de Hunshelf, and ten years later appears as John Wilson. The Rev. Mark Noble* says that "it was late in the Seventeenth century that many families in Yorkshire, even of the more opulent sort, took stationary names," and in the present century a man, whose father's name was Johnson, becoming a pig-dealer, called himself John Pigman, and placed that name over his shop door. To this day, the miners in England do not, in most cases, know a family name, but are called by wife, children, friends and all, by some nickname, such as Nosey, Soaker, Bulleyed, etc.

It will be seen, then, that those men whose names appear in the early centuries, as W. de Granger, S. de Granger, Roger de la Grange, Richard le Granger, Jordan de la Grange, etc., were not necessarily blood kinsmen, or allied, save in occupation. They were possibly servants or laborers of higher or lower degree, for some great landowner about his barns and granaries, and later upon his farms. The lands were, of course, held by great families, who each owned many farms, and the name of Granger would not apply to them, but to their employes. The family, therefore, cannot be said to be of high or noble origin, but probably sprung from the middle or lower class of France or England. Indeed, to this day, the name is not found among those families who appear in Burke's "History of the Landed Gentry" but enough does appear to show that at present the name is found either as Grainger, Granger, or le Grange among the best of the middle classes of Great Britain.

In England, in the earlier centuries, the French article a, the particle le (the) or de le (of the) were prefixed to the names simply as descriptive of the person. As has been shown, Roger-who-worked-at-the barn, would be the meaning of Roger de la Granger, and John

* Hist. Coll. Names, 29.

Graunger or Richard le Granger would mean John the farmer, or Richard the barnman. But as the influence of the Saxon tongue was felt upon the imported French names, the particles began to be dropped, and about the time of Henry the Sixth, they rapidly disappeared, with the adoption of hereditary family names and the use of the title Esquire by the heads of families, and Generosus by the sons. Children then began to take the names of their fathers; John de la Grange became John Granger, and his offspring, Granger's. Corruption of the French word Grange crept in, as was natural, in England, and became Graunge, as we see in the Pious Plowman, which, describing the Good Samaritan, says :

“ His wounds he washed,
 Embawmed hym and bound his head,
 And ledde hym forth on Lyard
 To “Lex Christi” a graunge
 Wel sixe or sevene
 Beside the newe market.”

So the corruption of the name into Graunger naturally followed, as the letter “u” was frequently introduced into words by the Saxons.

Again, the connection of the barn or farm with grain, produced sometimes a spelling of the name as Grainger, which exists to this day, and grange is still spelled grainge in Burgundy. The two families Granger and Grainger still keep the spelling distinct and each has a different coat of arms and crest. And to the workmen themselves the same change in spelling is applied, for we find in Henry Best's “Farming Book” (A. D. 1641) the following :

“ His tenants, the graingers, are tyed to come themselves, and winde the woll; they have a fatte weather, and a fatte lambe killed, and a dinner provided for their paines.”

The word graingers, it clearly appears, was here distinctly applied to the laborers upon a farm; in this case a sheep farm, as they were to “winde the woll” (wool) and they were “tenants” of the owner of the farm.

I have often been informed by members of the family that the name appears upon the Roll of Battle Abbey, and this has been claimed by some of my enthusiastic relatives as unmistakable evidence of the antiquity of our line. I have already shown that surnames were not hereditary at the time of the Conquest, but a brief sketch of the famous Roll will not be inappropriate here. Readers should also remember that "The unsettled state of surnames in those early times renders it difficult to trace the pedigree of any family beyond the thirteenth century."—Lower's "Family Nomenclature."

The Battle of Hastings was fought 14 Oct., 1066. Tradition says that, on the morning after, Odo, Bishop of Bayeux (Baiux), sung Mass, and then the Duke ordered his clerk to call the roll of his warriors to learn who had fallen in the struggle. He then ordered a monastery to be erected upon the site of the struggle, which was called Battle Abbey, and to the monks he entrusted the engrossing of the names of all his principal soldiers who had survived the fight. This they proceeded to do, and the roll was hung upon the walls of Battle Abbey to preserve to posterity the names of those who won the great victory.

How long the Roll hung upon the walls of the famous abbey is a matter of conjecture, and no definite trace of its future history remains. We know that Henry the Eighth granted the abbey and its appurtenances to Sir Anthony Browne, ancestor of the Viscounts Montague, but this family sold the mansion to Sir Thomas Webster, Bart. and removed to Cowdray House, near Midhurst. It is strongly suspected that to this latter place the famous document was carried. Cowdray House was afterwards burnt with all its contents, and possibly the most valued list of names in the world was then destroyed.

There are six or more so-called copies of the Roll, which have come down from earlier times, but they must all be received with great suspicion. Not but what they contain many names which were undoubtedly upon the original Roll, but it is certain that many have been added since the year of the battle. Sir William Dugdale openly accuses the Monks of Battle of having inserted the names of persons whose ancestors were never at the Conquest, moved, undoubtedly, by flattery or bribes. The lists differ greatly; names appear in some which are not found in others. Spelling is different, and in one only (Foxe's) does the initial or Christian name appear.

Preference is usually given to the list prepared by John Leland, both because it shows more marks of correctness, and because he is the only transcriber who saw the original Roll. In this the name of Granger does not appear, nor does it in Hollingshead's copy, in which appear the names of over six hundred persons. But in that known as "Foxe's Copy" appear the names of W. de Grangers and S. de Grangers, and upon this some hang their misty claim to a connection with the Conquerors.

But Foxe's copy is the most unauthentic of all. It appears in his "Acts and Monuments." He never saw the Roll itself, and confesses that he "took it out of the Annals of Normandy, in French, whereof one very ancient written booke in parchment remaineth in the custody of the writer himself." He divides the names into three lists: 1st. Those who were evidently of the highest rank. 2d. The Archers of Val du Real and many other places, and 3d, Other names "out of the ancient chronicles of England, touching the names of other Normans which remain alive after the Battle, and to be advanced to the Seignories of this land." In this list, so wanting in evidences of authenticity, so unreliable on its face, admittedly taken from an old French manuscript, we base our claim that two by the name of Granger came over with William the Conqueror.

I have said sufficient to show how difficult it would be, under the most favorable circumstances, to trace the family, or any family, back to the twelfth or thirteenth century. We should undoubtedly meet the fact that our fathers did not then take the surname of theirs, and find many Grangers allied, not by blood, but by occupation. Proof would meet us of the truth of the saying by a well-known writer, "Our actual names are the Christian ones; the surnames have sprung up in consequence of the inadequacy of them to distinguish the increasing number of individuals."

There is no crest or coat-of-arms of the Grangers, which, as far as I can learn, the descendants of Launcelot have a clear title to. There are several crests which have belonged to families of the same name as ours, but it does not by any means follow that Launcelot had a right to any of them. A few words in explanation will assist in making clear this statement.

Crests were originally an ornament worn on the top of a helmet by a knight in armor, so that he, while his face was covered with his metal vizor, could be distinguished and known in battle. These crests were generally the design of a bird, animal, or part of a man, such as a leg, an arm, or hand. Afterwards the "Arms" were displayed upon the shield which the knight carried, or were embroidered on the tunic or "camise" which was worn over the armor. These arms served the same purpose as the crest. When the necessity which first caused their use disappeared before the advent of gunpowder, the crest and arms were retained by the descendants of those who had borne them in battle, as a matter of family pride. At first the crest and arms were selected by each knight according to his own fancy, and were not hereditary, but eventually they were granted by the Sovereign, who appointed the Heralds to have charge of the records of the arms. Severe laws were enacted, now repealed, forbidding the use of the crest or arms by any unauthorized person. At present the Garter King at Arms is the head of the English College of Heralds, the Lyon King of the Scottish College, and the Ulster King of the Irish one. The crest and arms of the person to whom they were granted descended intact to his eldest son, while the younger sons were required to make a "difference" in the arms. They thus became strictly hereditary, passing down from father to son in the direct male line. If arms had been granted to Launcelot's father, or if he had inherited them, Launcelot himself would have been entitled to bear them, but if they had been granted to Launcelot's uncle, instead of his father, they would not have descended to us.

It will be seen, then, that, before we can claim arms or a crest, we must show that our ancestors had an undisputed title to them, either by grant or inheritance, and it is not sufficient to show that some family named Granger had a right at one time to bear them. All

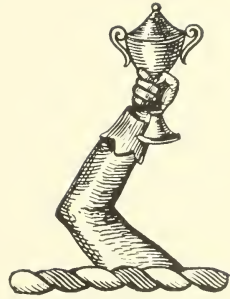

Smiths do not come from the same ancestor Smith ; all Grangers can make no better claim to be descended from a common Granger. One writer truly says : "To strike at the root of the evil, it is necessary to state explicitly that there is no such thing as a coat-of-arms belonging to the bearer of any particular surname. Identity of name does not argue identity of origin."

Many of the emigrants to New England were gentlemen of distinction and family, and brought with them their arms, which have been carefully preserved by their descendants, and are therefore authentic. Other New England families have traced their line back to their old home, and connected themselves with some ancestor there who had a clear title to a crest and armorial bearings. But diligent search has failed to discover any coat-of-arms of Launcelot, and, until we connect him with his English family, there is no hope of our obtaining a just and indefeasible title to the insignia which so many people prize. Most of the American families find themselves in a like position as ourselves, but that does not deter many from flaunting a crest and arms. "The ordinary mode of assuming armorial bearings (in America) has been a reference to the nearest seal or card engraver, who, from an heraldic encyclopedia has furnished the applicant with the arms of any family of the same name." Probably not one out of a hundred of those families in this country, who claim to have coats-of-arms, have a shadow of title to the same. It is reported that a European ambassador at Washington, having sent his carriage to the repair shop, called one day to see how the work was progressing. He was surprised to see his coat-of-arms, which graced the panel of the door of his coach, reproduced upon half a dozen other carriages in the shop which did not belong to him. In answer to his indignant protests, the carriage-maker explained that some of his customers had thought the arms "real pretty," and at their request he had obligingly painted it upon their panels also.

There are several crests known to have belonged to different branches of the Granger family. The most common is figure one (1), and is described in the language of heraldry “ a dexter arm, couped and embowed, in hand three wheat ears, all ppr.” It cannot be found to what particular branch this crest belongs ; it is simply recorded as the crest “ of the Grangers,” and is, perhaps, the safest to use, if one wishes a crest.

On an old deed in Tettenhall, in Staffordshire, appears the crest of the “ Grangers of Staffordshire,” and is shown in figure two (2). It is described as “ a griffin passant (without gorging).” The griffin was an emblem of vigilance, and inhabited the mountains of Bactria, where he guarded an immense treasure of gold.

The Graingers also had many crests. One family of that name bore the one shown in figure three (3), and it is described “ A dexter arm couped, az, purfled or, cupped ar in hand, all ppr.” A family of Graingers in Essex had as a crest a dexter arm bearing a portcullis, as shown in figure four (4). Still another had the portcullis alone, figure five (5).

A woman cannot, under any circumstances, bear a crest (though she may bear arms), unless she is a sovereign princess, but in this country we are all sovereigns.

The motto of all the Grangers is “ Honestas optima politia ” (Honesty is the best policy).

During later years, indeed, within this century, the pronunciation of the family name has changed in most parts of the country. Almost universally it is now pronounced as though it were spelt GRAIN-ger. Up to fifty years ago, it was always spoken as it is spelt, for the present pronunciation is certainly not correct, save so far as modern custom makes it so. The old pronunciation gave the first syllable the sound of gran, in gran-ny, gran-ite, gran-ulate, etc. It would certainly sound strange, and, possibly, unpleasant to the modern ear, if the name should now be spoken as in the olden time, but it would be sanctioned both by the ancient custom and phonetic rules. Yet to this day, in Boston and certain parts of Eastern New England, the former pronunciation prevails, and I have there been sometimes addressed in the old style.

The meaning of the name Launcelot is “ A little angel.”

CHAPTER II.

THE FIRST GRANGERS IN AMERICA.

By the time that immigration set in from England to the Colonies, the family names had become hereditary. The descendants of the workers in the fields and about the barns had assumed the name derived from their ancestral calling, and carried it with them to the western world. The name, and such money as they had, by the industries of a few generations, collected by hard labor, was, with a good reputation and sound health (it is hoped) all which they carried with them. Evidently the Grangers had no family pride, grand traditions, or blue blood to import into the land of their adoption. They came here without prestige to make their way without favor or aid. All those of the name among the earlier settlers of whom we have trace, occupied themselves at first with the distinctly family business of farming, or their names appear first in the rural districts where all were tillers of the soil. Niccolas Graunger, aged 15, came in the ship George in 1618, and appears in the muster of the inhabitants of the eastern shore of Virginia as late as 1623. From him, I suspect, sprang the large family named Granger, now scattered over Virginia and Maryland. Robert Granger, aged 21, went from London to the Barbadoes in 1634; Bryan Granger appeared in the newly-settled town of Salem in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, in 1637, and then forever disappears from view. Thomas Granger, after passing a satisfactory examination before the ministers at Greenwich, England, "as to the state of his religion," sailed in the ship David for Virginia, in 1635. It was customary in those days, to the end that only such "as feared God" might settle in the newly-formed colonies, to have each emigrant examined by a minister in England touching his religious condition, and thus prevent, if possible, the importation of all such as might be of moral damage to the community in which they were thereafter to live.

John Granger and Grace, his wife, appear to have been at Scituate in the colony of Plymouth, as early as 1640. They had three children, born in the old country, John, Thomas, and Elizabeth. John, Sr., died at Scituate in 1640. John, Jr., whom it appears by his mother's will (1648) was not then of age, died at Marshfield, October 4, 1655, and was buried in the adjoining town of Scituate. Thomas, the other son, became the servant of Love Brewster of Plymouth, and was hung for a (then) capital offense* on September 8, 1642. He was then "a youth under twenty," probably about 17. What became of Elizabeth, does not appear, but evidently the family became extinct in 1655, on the male side at least. Grace, the widow, died in 1648, and her will, dated November 24, 1648, is one of the earliest probated in the Plymouth Colony.†

The crime of Thomas Granger excited greatly the good people of the parent colony. They were shaken from attic to cellar. The culprit was examined not only by the civil, but by the ecclesiastical authorities. Ministers as well as judges reviewed his case, and the former, who, through their own kind in the land across the sea, were the guardians and sentries who watched that the Devil crept not into New England, were aghast. They were in quaking despair, that one so ungodly should have gotten in among the saints of the colony, and at a gathering of the parsons of Plymouth, discussed the momentous question how such a thing was possible, since "Seeing it was religious men ye begane ye worke (planting the colony) and they came for religion's sake." The conference concluded it was because

"1st. When ye Lord begins to sow good seed, ther ye envious man will endeavor to sow tares.

* N. E. Gen. & His. Register, Vol. 3, Part 4, p. 397 et seq.

† N. E. Gen. & His. Reg., Vol. 4, 253.

“2ed. Because ther being much labour & service about building & planting in the wilderness, when men could not get such help as they would, were glad to take such help as they could, and so many untoward servants were brought over.

“3ed. And the maine reason, because men finding so many godly disposed persons willing to come to these parts, began to make a trade of transporting passengers and goodes, and hired ships to that ende, and then for profits sake cared not who they carried, so that they had money to pay them.

“4th. As a mixed multitude came into ye wilderness with ye people of God out of Egipte of old, so also there were sent by their friends, some under ye hope they would do better; others that they might be eased of such burdens, and thus, in 20 years time, it is a question whether ye greater part be not growne ye worsen.”

The execution of Thomas Granger was conducted in a strictly scriptural manner and according to the Levitical law (Leviticus xx, 15) and Thomas was the last part of the sacrifice.

Lists of some of the emigrants from England were preserved, and Hotton, in his valuable work, gives the names of hundreds of people who sailed from the old country to America and the West Indies. But diligent search in every available book fails to show the name of Launcelot Granger, or any Granger other than those given already, among the passengers of any ship. Yet the lists are very incomplete, containing but a fraction of those who did come. Hutchinson and others state that in the first twenty years of the New England colonies (1620-1640) 298 ships had come to the province, bringing 21,200 passengers, besides goods of all kinds, and while some have doubted the accuracy of this, its probability is maintained by those writers best competent to judge. With the year 1640 came a change which opened a way for passengers to come to the Bay Colony from those colonies to the south, which opportunity we know was seized by many. The revolution in England, headed by Cromwell, removed the cause which had induced such large emigration. Without a warning the influx stopped almost entirely, never to be resumed during colonial days. Indeed, the colonists began to talk of returning to the old home and many did go, while Cromwell conceived a plan to remove them all to Ireland. Prices of everything produced by the settlers fell, since more was produced than could be consumed, and new mouths came not to demand the surplus. New milch cows fell in one year from £30 to £5; an estate valued at £1,000 in three months declined to £200. A financial crash was upon the people, and to various other pursuits than farming they turned their hands. Saw-mills sprang up, fishing was encouraged by the government, and merchants fitted out vessels to carry lumber and provisions to the West Indies and other distant colonies. Thus by these vessels people dissatisfied with the Barbadoes, St. Christopher, and other isles, drifted up to the colonies of New England, whose remarkable progress and thrift had been noised about the world. So our ancestor who appeared in 1648, had many ways and routes by which to reach this land, and there is no way of definitely saying whether he came from the settlements of Sir Fernando Gorges on the Maine coast, from the isles of the southern seas, from cavalier Virginia, or from the British home land. Perhaps in some musty pigeon hole in an English port, the long desired paper inscribed with the name of Launcelot and his fellow passengers exist, but these dusty corners have been well ransacked by Hotten and others, and little hope remains that anything on the point will ever be unearthed.

I will briefly say that in my researches I have discovered a family whose ancestors were expelled from Grand Prés at the same time as the mythical Evangeline. They were French, of course, and went into Canada. Their descendants are scattered through the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, etc., and I find one, a priest of the Roman Catholic church, a resident of the busy city of Chicago. It is, of course, a distinct family from ours.

CHAPTER III.

WHENCE CAME LAUNCELOT GRANGER ?

I presume that I have been asked the question which heads this chapter, more frequently than any other, and to all I have given the same answer, "I do not know." I have to confess that I have made no attempt to trace him to his English home, both from want of time and opportunity, as well as from the difficulty of the task. The name exists over the entire district of Great Britain ; in England, in Ireland, in Scotland, and in Wales. From all these lands Grangers have immigrated to the United States, but generally since the Revolution. Some of these families, and especially the Scotch, trace their line back for several centuries, and show connections with families of rank and position. A number appear among the clergy of the Church of England, and the Rev. James Granger, the famous biographical historian, erected a lasting monument to himself in his literary works. On August 1, 1700, Thomas Granger, a lay officer of Westminster Abbey, was buried within its precincts ; John Granger, a deputy teller of the Exchequer, was also buried in the Abbey on March 8, 1736, as was his wife on July 17, 1735. But it has been impossible for me to trace up these persons bearing our name to any connection with those who came earlier to America.

There has naturally come to me through my extensive correspondence with the members of the family, traditions as to the coming of Launcelot, which have been handed down from father to son. He is said to have been a Welshman ; a Scotchman ; a North of Ireland man ; an Englishman. These statements are mostly but traditions, and unsupported by substantial proof. They must be given here without endorsement by me, and must be received by my readers with such credit as each chooses to give. It certainly is to be regretted that nothing more definite is known regarding his advent into this country, and a hope had that some time among the early colonial papers of New England, a clew can be found which will unravel the mystery.

From some members of the family, widely scattered over the land, came the story that three brothers named Granger, came together from England and settled on the Massachusetts coast. One of these was Launcelot; the names of the others are not given. It is a story misty and dim at best, endorsed by no facts or dates. It is not impossible but it is improbable. There were, indeed, three men by the name of Granger in New England about the same time; John of Scituate, whose record we know; Byron of Salem (1637), of whom we know nothing further; and Launcelot at Ipswich (1648), the subject of this sketch. But, beyond the fact that these three were in that country about the same time, there is nothing to vouch for the correctness of the story, and I am inclined to pass it by without further thought or comment.

There is another story which comes down through many years and through many hands, which was long ago reduced to writing from the lips of one who was born not many years after the death of Launcelot, and to it I am inclined to give a great deal of attention and credit. It is romantic, it is true, but history tells us that such incidents were not uncommon in the early days of Massachusetts. Let me give it as it comes to me, with such comments as I think pertinent.

Sarah Granger was born at Suffield, August 16, 1731, about forty years after the death of Launcelot. Her father was John, a grandson of Launcelot, being born in 1706. Her grandfather, Thomas, was one of the children who came over from Newbury to Suffield with his father, the founder of the family, and he died but a year before Sarah was born. She was a woman of more than average brightness, and I am told retained her mind and memory to the end. She married a Suffield man, Joel Harmon, and with him removed to Ravenna, Ohio, where she died, February 28, 1830, nearly one hundred years old.

Ebenezar Granger was born at Suffield, July 6, 1781, and died at Zanesville, Ohio, September 22, 1822, where he was a lawyer. He was a nephew of Mrs. Harmon, his father being her youngest brother. Ebenezar was very intimate with the Harmons after their joint removal to Ohio, and frequently visited them. From her lips he heard the story, and, at the time, wrote it down. This paper is still extant, and I give it verbatim as follows :

“Launcelot Granger was born in the west of England, and, when a lad of twelve or fourteen years of age, he was stolen from his mother (his father being dead) and brought to Plymouth in Massachusetts, where he was sold (apprenticed) to serve two years for his passage. He had served on the ship as a cabin boy.

“He afterwards married a lady named Adams, and settled east of Boston, where he lived till he had two children.

“Being the eldest of his family he returned to England to obtain his inheritance. On the way from the place where he landed to his mother’s house, to which he traveled on foot, he had to pass through an uninhabited country, and, just before night, stopped at a little cottage. The old man of the house told him that frequent robberies had been committed on the road a short distance ahead, and advised him to put up for the night. But, not knowing but what he would be in as much danger at the cottage as on the road, and being in haste, he determined to proceed. After he had advanced some distance into the woods he perceived by the light of the moon a man step into the road before him and move on slowly until a second one joined him. When he came up to them they demanded his money. He told them he had but one crown, which was barely sufficient to pay his expenses to his friends, who lived at some distance. They, however told him he must give up his money or they would take his life. He replied that if they got his money they must fight for it, on which they attacked him with their swords, while he defended himself with his quarter-staff. With the butt end of this he knocked down one and dispatched him, and the other ran away. When he arrived at the next village he made oath to what he had done, before a magistrate, and was suffered to proceed on his journey. The inhabitants of the village found the man who was slain to be one of their ‘honest’ citizens.

“When he arrived at his mother’s house, he found his younger brother in possession of the estate, and very much displeased to see him, and, it is supposed, hired assassins to dispatch him. As he walked out with them, under the pretence of viewing the farm, they attacked him behind a wood, with their swords, but he defended himself so manfully with his quarter-staff that he killed two of them and the other fled. He returned and made known what he had done to the magistrate, who, upon investigation, acquitted him of all blame. Meeting, however, with difficulties in obtaining his inheritance," (He certainly did.—ED.) "he abandoned it and returned to America.

"Launcelot was a man of great resolution; was of full medium height and stockily built."

The story is one which will at first raise a smile, and one would be tempted to cast aside as too romantic and improbable. Indeed, even now, I am not inclined to accept it as true in all its details, but a careful study of the times show that in the main it is not improbable. Then, too, it comes to me in more or less the same form from other sources; from Grangers most distantly related to Mrs. Harmon. One old lady, a descendant of the Pennsylvania branch, assures me that it has been handed down in her family for generations as true. Since, then, from so many sources comes the same story, I feel warranted in at least discussing its probability.

In the first twenty years after the founding of the colonies in New England (1620-1640) the influx of immigrants was great. I have already stated that it is estimated that over 21,000 people came over in 298 ships, and more in others. The colonies became over-crowded, and, as the ministers found in the case of Thomas Granger, many ungodly people were employed in bringing other ungodly people into New England. Servants were in demand; they had to be obtained by fair means if possible; by foul if necessary. Men and ships were specially employed in the business of supplying the demand. Convicts were banished to the new world, and many of the New England families are descended from these involuntary immigrants who left their country for their country's good. Finally men and boys were kidnapped in large numbers at the various English seaports, and carried to the shores of Massachusetts Bay and Plymouth. In this the apprentice laws of New England assisted.

The apprenticing of boys and youths was conducted by the town authorities, and contracts were enforced in the strictest manner. It is interesting to trace through the historical fragments which have come down to us, the condition of these apprenticeships. At Windsor, Conn., the contract stipulated that the master should teach the boy to "read and write English and cast accounts, and be at the cost and use his best endeavors to get his scurf head cured." At the end of his apprenticeship this sore-headed boy was to receive double apparel, a musket, a sword, bandoliers, and 20s. A girl in Charlestown was bound for five years, at the end of which time she was to receive a she-goat. For improper conduct, apprentices were ordered by the court to be imprisoned, or whipped, or fined. If they did not pay the fine they were sometimes sold to Virginia, the Barbadoes, or any English colony or plantation. In 1654 Rhode Island passed a law to return apprentices and servants who had escaped from their masters in the other colonies.

It is plain, then, that the portion of Sarah Harmon's story that Launcelot was kidnapped as a boy in England and brought to Plymouth, where he was sold as an apprentice, is fully within the bounds of possibility and reason. His would not have been an exceptional case, but one with hundreds of similar ones. There is no doubt in my mind that there is some element of truth in this part of the story; that Launcelot was kidnapped and apprenticed out in the Plymouth colony, and that after his discharge he left the place of his servitude for the adjacent colony of Massachusetts Bay. The very name he bore seems to show that he did not belong to the Puritan, but the Cavalier party, and his trip to New England would hardly have been a voluntary one "for religion's sake."

There are also fingers which point to the probability of his return to England to recover his portion of the estate, but I doubt if he returned to America empty-handed. As to the fights in which he was forced to take a hand, I prefer to pass them by. Launcelot was a thick-set sturdy man, able to defend himself, and the times were turbulent and dangerous especially in the West of England. Highway robbery and murder was not unknown in those days, as readers of English history are aware.

It will be seen later that, when Launcelot was living at Ipswich, he courted and married the daughter of a Puritan, an elder in the church, a man of position and means. Launcelot himself was never a member of the church at Newbury. I have the names of all the members during his time, and his is not among them. He was never a freeman or voter at Newbury; only a church member attained the right. The Puritans were bitter in their hatred of those outside their church organizations; they refused to associate with them. But in one respect they tolerated them; if the son of Belial was rich, they would permit their daughters to marry him. Launcelot, a child of Satan, married a daughter of Robert Adams, a Puritan of the strictest kind. He must have returned from England the second time, supplied with that golden disinfectant which made him acceptable to the nostrils of the old Puritan as a son-in-law.

In 1654 the majority of the dwellings within the colony were of the humblest sort. A writer describes them as follows :

“They were built of logs, the floor of earth or split logs. They were at least 18 feet long, 16 feet wide, and of 9 foot studd. A good chimney gave a domestic hearth and made them comfortable. Dedham had ninety-five of these log houses in 1664; four only were valued at twenty pounds; the most ranged from three to ten pounds. The roofs were thatched, and this covering was common until about 1691.

“The better class of houses were two storied; the upper usually juted about one foot over the lower story. Sometimes the roof was gambled, and often it sloped through the upper story, making the rear line lower than the front. The frame timbers were heavy and of oak; the windows were two and a half to three feet long; one and a half to two feet wide. A common arrangement of the first floor was a ‘great room,’ i. e. company room, and a kitchen, each twenty feet square, with a bedroom and large cheese and milk pantry. Closets clustered about the chimney on either floor; some of them were arranged for hiding places. Bricks were laid against the inner partition or wooden wall, and covered with clay; boards were placed on the outside, first called clay-boards, and then corrupted into clap-boards.”*

When Launcelot was married in 1654 he took his wife to a newly built house of the better class on Kent's Island in Newbury. It was such a one as has just been described. It was forty-eight feet long, twenty-two feet wide; two storied with an attic, and built of sawed oak lumber. It had a large "great room" and kitchen on the first floor, besides a bedroom and pantry. In its huge chimney were three fireplaces, two closets and an oven. The lower story was lined with brick. It was, in fact, one of the best classes of houses in the colony, and a young bridegroom who could commence house-keeping at the top of the ladder must have been different from most of the young men of his day. It points to the truth of what I claim, that Launcelot was a very well-to-do man at the time of his marriage, and, if he did return to England to recover his inheritance, he was successful in obtaining at least a portion of it.

CHAPTER IV.

LAUNCELOT GRANGER AT IPSWICH.

The town of Ipswich is one of the oldest in the Bay Colony. In 1624 a small fishing station was started on Cape Ann by the Rev. Mr. White, but it soon ceased to exist, and upon the settlement of Salem in 1626 by John Winthrop, Jr., and his companions most of Mr. White's neighbors removed with one house to the new town. In 1628 the colony of Massachusetts Bay was chartered by the King, and in the summer of 1630 John Winthrop, Sr., and others, coming from England to plant the colony, landed at Salem. Thence they passed through the woods southward to the site of present Charlestown, and in the autumn of the same year founded Boston. Then followed Newetown (now Cambridge), Waterton (town), Rocksbury, and other neighboring towns. Meanwhile Salem thrived to the north, and still further on, across the Merrimac River, grew up some settlements fostered by the persevering Sir Fernando Gorges. But in 1631, the French having appeared in Nova Scotia, building forts and making settlements, so alarmed the newly-come inhabitants of Massachusetts Bay that the General Court in the year 1633 voted that John Winthrop, Jr., and his friends at Salem be directed to hasten the settlement of Ipswich, "it being one of the best places for pasture and tillage" north of Boston, and so prevent the French from seizing upon it. Winthrop, Jr., and twelve men from the bay at once took up their abode in the new town. It was incorporated in 1634. The land was owned by the freemen, called commoners, who granted lots to settlers "for building and agriculturing purposes." These commoners held the land till 1788. Hence, to own land there in the first 150 years of its existence one must have been a freeman, and necessarily a member of the church. For although the colony of Massachusetts Bay was chartered as a trading company, and the "adventurers" first connected with it had an eye only to a pecuniary return, yet no sooner had John Winthrop and his non-conformist associates settled at Boston than at the General Court on October 19, 1630, it was decreed that no one should be elected a freeman (i. e., what we should call a member or stockholder of the company) who was not a member of the church. This rule continued to be enforced until 1691; hence, but a small portion of the colony were freemen. No one but a freeman could vote, hold office, or sit on juries; and it came about that many came unto Court to have matters of personal interest, both civil and criminal, adjudicated by those who were not only not their peers, but perhaps their unrelenting religious foes.

The northern towns grew fast — too fast to please the cautious General Court, who desired none but godly people to come among them; and on September 7, 1630, and again in April, 1633, the Court ordered that hereafter none should go to plant or inhabit in "Agawam" save those already there, without permission of that august body. Ships came to Salem direct and disembarked all their passengers there, who quickly settled in its immediate neighborhood. On May 24, 1634, the Rev. Thomas Parker and his assistant and relative, the Rev. James Noyes, arrived at the bay with a chosen band of 100, mostly from Newbury, England, and "went to sit down at Agawam" (Ipswich). But in this and the following year settlers came so fast that they could not be accommodated, and "swarmed over" into the adjoining country. Early in the spring (March of 1635) Parker and a few of his followers, going by boat from Ipswich through Plumb Island Sound, entered the Parker River, and, disembarking on the north shore about 100 rods below the present bridge, "where the land was inviting and pleasing," founded their town, which they called Newbury, after Newbury, Berkshire, England. The river they named the Parker River, in honor of their "beloved minister," a man who in the next twenty-five years caused more commotion and bitter feeling over ecclesiastical points, not only in his own church but in those of the colony at large, than any score of clergymen could now do in half a century. Henceforth the town grew rapidly, until within a few years it was well filled with industrious, godly settlers.

By the year 1640, when, as I have said, immigration ceased and natural increase alone added to the population, there were a goodly number of settlements well peopled stretching north from Boston to within the limits of what is now New Hampshire. The main road ran north to Salem, thence twelve miles north again to Ipswich, thence still north through Rowley eight miles to the settlement at Newbury called "the lower green," just across the Parker River, and thence again north to far beyond the Merrimac. Along this one main road there was much passing by foot, by horse, and by team, and constant intercourse between the inhabitants. It was easy for a man to move from one town to another without getting beyond reach of his old neighbors and friends, for there was but one road to travel and not far to go.

Ipswich lies at the mouth of the Ipswich River in the present county of Essex in Massachusetts. The Indian name was Agawam, meaning "fishing station." The river furnishes excellent water power and the harbor a safe place for vessels. Following the depression of 1640 saw and grist mills lined the river, and merchants sent ships from its port trading to distant points. It was, however, a farming community in the main. But what Launcelot Granger's occupation here was is a matter of mere conjecture. He may have sought labor in the mills, at the shipyards, upon the coasters, or in the fish-houses; but as he followed farming in Newbury, where equal advantages for engaging in other work existed, it may perhaps be fairly presumed he was indeed a granger while in ancient Agawam.

The church records of Ipswich were unfortunately destroyed by fire in 1730, and those town records which have been published are very meagre. The following from Volume II, Massachusetts General and Historical Register, page 50, is indeed the only one in which I find the name of Launcelot Granger. It is contributed to that periodical by Mr. Luther Wait, who assures the publisher that it is the first record which he finds in the old books which gives the names of all the "freemen" in Ipswich, and that he spells the names just as he found them. I quote it in full:

"At the generall Towne meeting held 19 of December 1648: wheras the ynhabitants of this Towne haue engaged themselves to pay yearly on the 10th day of Decembar vnto maior Denison soe long as he shall be there Leader the Summ of twenty four pounds seaven shillings in way of grauitiye to encourage him in his military helpfullness unto them as by severall subscriptions vnder their hands may appeare. And because it is most manifest the sayd sum will not be rayseed unlesse some better order be taken for the same espeshally in respect of the Alteration, and change of the ynhabitants. Yt is therefore ordered that henceforth the seaven men shall yearly in November put the sd sum of 24£ 7s into a rate porportioning it vpon the ynhabitants, (haveing alsoe respect to the bill of subscriptions of the Towne from year to yeare,) to be levyed & colected by the constable and payd unto the sayd maior Denison on the 10th of December yearly soe long as he shall continue to be the leader of this companye.

"A list of the names of those that did subscribe there severall somes yearly while he continued to be our Leader:"

Then followed a list of 162 persons to be taxed and the amounts each had subscribed. Among them I find "Launslot Granger 4 s." Very few had subscribed more than this sum, and most less.

The maior (or Major) Denison here mentioned was a prominent member of the town, a famous militia man, member of the artillery company, having occupied all the military offices to the highest, and was also a frequent member of the General Court. Evidently he commanded the town troops, a position of much responsibility in view of the proximity of the Indians.

This is the first known record of our ancestor—the record that he lived and was a taxpayer in Ipswich in 1648. Slight though it be, it yet conveys some information. Launcelot was at least twenty-one years of age in 1648. He must have been well to do, for he was assessed a sum larger than that assessed against most of his neighbors.

I question, however, whether Mr. Waite is correct in assuming that all who are named in the subscription were freemen. I give reasons later for thinking Launcelot was not a freeman until he removed to Suffield. The fact that he paid taxes at Ipswich could not be taken as conclusive that he was a church member. Church of England men and other "children of Satan" must pay their dues to the colony as well as the orthodox.

CHAPTER V.

ROBERT ADAMS.—THE KENTS AND THEIR ISLAND.—LAUNCELOT AND JOANNA.

Robert Adams was a tailor. He had lived and was married in England. Some say that his native place was in Devonshire, others that it was in "far distant Holderness in County York." Before he expatriated himself there were born to him (first) John and (second) Joanna, in 1634. These children, with his wife, accompanied him to Salem, where he landed in 1638, removing to Newbury in 1640. Nine children were born to him, and he was a man of "good estate." He was a freeman and a leading church member. He died in 1682-3. The date of Joanna's birth is not known, more than it was in 1634, but she was alive in 1701.

When and where Launcelot and Joanna met and loved can be imagined by my readers to suit their individual fancy; the records of Essex county are silent on the point. That it was not at balls and 5-o'clock "teas" can be set down as certain, since not a pound of tea or coffee was drank in Newbury in the entire seventeenth century. Probably the customs of the Puritans prevailed. Launcelot walked from Ipswich to Newbury at proper intervals, attended meeting with the old folks, watched the solemn deacon on the front seat (there were no pews in the Newbury church) turn the hour-glass when the sermon began, to see that the minister preached the requisite and prescribed time, and listened to the Rev. Mr. Parker as he discussed the burning question of the time, "Is sanctification necessary to faith and justification?" Anyway the courtship was successful, and on the 4th day of January, A. D. 1654, according to our style (1653, according to the old, for the Puritan year began March 25th), Launcelot and Joanna were married by Mr.

Adams, a magistrate, ministers not having the authority at that time to join persons in wedlock. She was then just twenty years of age. We can well suppose her husband was a few years older.

The family of Adams having united with that of the Grangers, it may be well to tell here what more is necessary for us to know about them. Robert Adams lived, as I have said, until October 12, 1682, when he, dying, was buried at the "lower green." We find the records of his will and the inventory of his estate. The former is dated March 7, 1681-2, and proved at Salem 28th, 9th month, 1682. His second wife, Sara, widow of Henry Short, by whom he had no children, and his various descendants are each remembered. He bequeaths "to daughter Joanna, wife of Launcelot Granger, one cow," and again "to daughter Joanna Granger my pewter tankard and a pewter bowl." As she was then in far-distant Suffield, with almost impassable rivers and woods and hills between her and the old home, it may be doubted if she ever received the cow. The inventory shows Robert to have been a man of thrift, possessed of no little property for those days — indeed a man, as he is said to have been, of "good estate." He was a farmer as well as a tailor, and his homestead was just across the salt marshes from Kent's Island, hardly two thousand feet away. He left Prices, it must be remembered, were low, having greatly fallen since 1640; £222 would represent a good deal of furniture, and his house was more than well furnished for the times. Robert Adams must have been a fairly substantial citizen, and living in a style and with a comfort beyond the average of his neighbors.

If you sail south from the mouth of the great river Merrimac, which formerly formed the northern boundary of Newbury, through Plum Island Sound, which lies between that island and the main land, you come in about three miles to another river of fair proportions and navigable for boats of small dimensions. Its shores to-day are lined with charming sloping fields, with broad meadows, and salt marshes. Comfortable farmhouses and great spreading trees dot the landscape, suggesting plenty and rural success and happiness. Two miles or so up this river crosses the bridge of the ancient highway from Ipswich to Newbury. At the north end of this bridge is the "lower green," the spot where the first comers landed and built their homes and meeting-house. A mile yet farther up the marshes broaden out, and in their midst rises a great island, rocky and high. On this island have stood houses and barns for over two hundred and fifty years; here have lived and died generations of people. This river is the Parker River, and this island is Kent's Island, with which we have now to do. At this late day the steam cars cross its eastern end, and from the flying train you can see the very site and the ruined chimneys of the first family home in America of the Grangers.

In 1647 the town of Newbury (by the laws of the times the town was the first owner of the soil, which it gave away to actual settlers) set off to Richard Kent, Jr., this rocky island. It contained the two hundred and fifty-eight acres of upland, besides much meadow. It was a choice place, as Coffin in his work says "the meadow land was most valuable." This was not only because of the luxurious grasses which grew on the salt meadows, but also because of the great expense attending the clearing of the uplands. This island was a favored spot, and to it the Kents have clung even to this day, its present owners being Edward Kent, Esq., and his three brothers. It was, in the early days, entailed upon the eldest son, but in 1741 unexpected trouble came. In that year the owner of the island, intent only on the scriptural command "to increase and multiply," and fearing not the expense and tribulation of courts and juries, became the father of twins, whom he named Joseph and Stephen (Kent). In due course the old man died, and the twins each claimed the land. Naturally the interested parties could not themselves decide which was born first, and the testimony of intelligent witnesses was invoked. But it seems even they disagreed, and an appeal to the courts was had to decide between the twins. Two juries disagreed, and a settlement by judicial process seemed impossible. The Legislature was finally asked to intervene, and the General Court passed a bill ordering the island to be sold for the benefit of the twins and a brother still younger. Now the land has drifted back into the peaceable possession of four brothers, who hold it amicably as tenants in common.

Immediately upon his marriage Launcelot set up a home for himself, for I find that in the month and year of his marriage the young bridegroom entered into a contract with Richard Kent, Jr., by which he leased for the space of seven years next ensuing the whole of Kent's Island. The rent agreed to be paid for the land was £46 a year, a goodly rental indeed for those days. Then a shilling was worth a dollar of to-day. With the island and included in the lease were sixteen cows and four oxen, together with the new house just erected (1653) by Mr. Kent on the crest of the island.

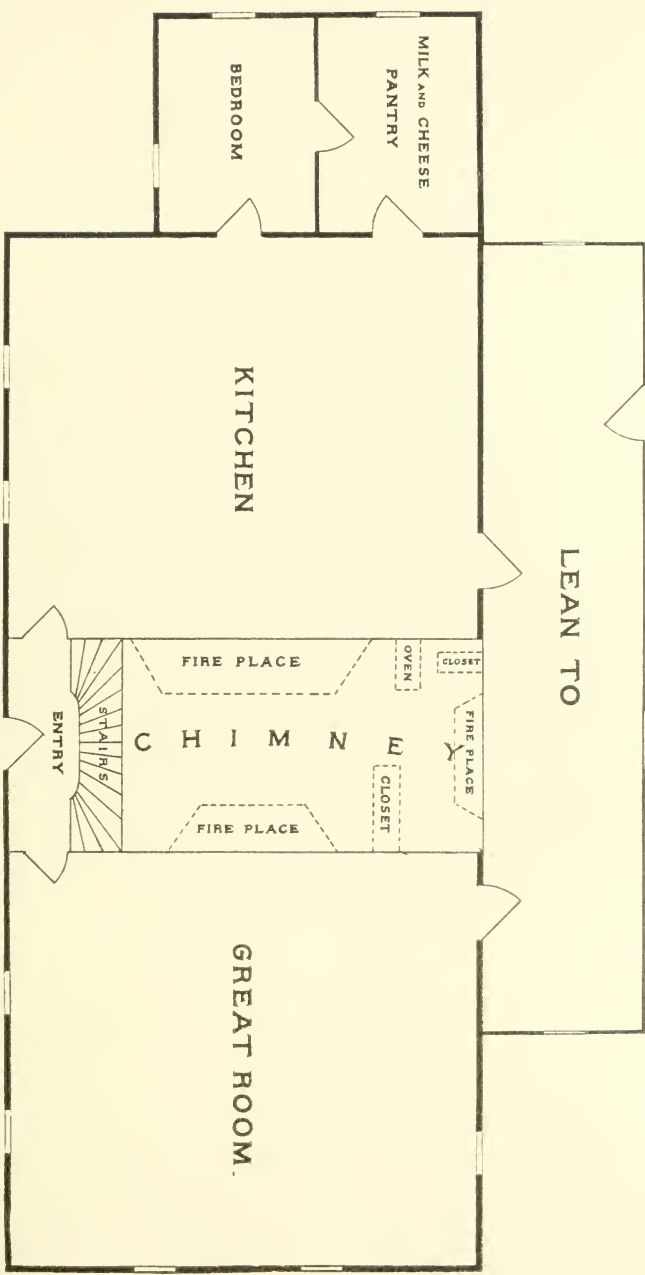

The road which skirts along the north shore of the Parker River runs from the "lower green" far into the interior. As it passes Kent's Island, the nearest shore of which is perhaps a quarter of a mile away, another road turns off, and, descending to the marsh, crosses the lowlands till it reaches the island. Then, turning to the left, it climbs the hill, passing between stone walls and orchards until it ends on one of the highest points of the island, just in front of the present mansion of the Kents.

Just before you reach the latter spot you notice to the left an old gateway in the stone wall, and back from the road some thirty-five feet the cellar of an old house. In the center of the excavation is a huge pile of bricks, the ruins of the old chimney. About on the grass lie immense beams, the timbers of the old house. These are of oak, some of them sixteen inches in diameter. Behind the cellar the land descends suddenly to the salt marsh, across which can be seen the higher land of the main shore. This is the site of Launcelot Granger's old home, and these are the ruins of the house to which he took his bride from her father's farm in sight across the meadow.

This house (torn down in 1884) was built by Richard Kent, Jr., in 1653, and after it was vacated by Launcelot (about 1674) was occupied by the Kent family. It was, as I have said, a house of the best class then built in the colony. It was forty-eight feet long by twenty-two wide, two storied with an attic. Between the inner and the outer shell the house was lined with brick up to the top of the first story — a protection against the Indians, who were most troublesome in the early days. Indeed, Mr. Kent shows a musket with which an Indian was killed upon the Island. In the east end of the house was the "great" or "company" room, with its large fireplace and closet in the chimney. At the other end was the kitchen, with its still larger fireplace, its oven, and large milk and cheese pantry. Behind was the usual "lean-to," which was also provided with a fireplace and chimney closet. The second floor, which projected a foot beyond the lower, was divided practically the same as the latter. It was in all respects a typical house of colonial New England, with all the features to be found in those of the better class, and it is accurately represented in the picture which forms the frontispiece of this book. It will always be a matter of regret that the old house was destroyed, but of pleasure that a picture of it was taken before it was demolished. Had it stood it would have been a place of pilgrimage for those who are descended from its first occupant.

Here Launcelot lived from January, 1654, until at least the summer of 1674, when he started for Suffield. Here all his children were born; here was the cradle of the family, its first abiding-place, its first hearthstone. The spot is worthy of a visit from all who take interest in their ancestor. It can be best reached by the traveler from Newburyport, whence a carriage and driver will quickly take one over the three miles of good road which leads to Kent's Island.

CHAPTER VI.

THE RECORD OF LAUNCELOT AT NEWBURY.—CHURCH TROUBLES AND PURITANICAL BIGOTRY.

We find but two records of Launcelot at Newbury ; one the lease of Kent's Island in 1654, and the other his signature and "remarks" on an undated protest. This last I will give at length. One John Emery of Newbury seems to have prepared and presented to the General Court a petition to which he obtained some signatures by false representations, and without authority himself affixed some others. It raised a great commotion in the town. A counter petition was drafted and signed. It read as follows :

" May it please the Hon'd court to understand, that these persons named underwritten, which are mentioned in John Emeryes petition are sons and servants under their parents and masters, of which some have not taken the oath of fidelity, and some do flatly deny that ever they gave power or liberty to put to their names, and some profess thet never saw the petition or heard it read."

Then follows the names of such as have not taken the oath ; men who were town charges ; men who never paid rates ; men who were sons, etc. Finally we find the following :

" And Launcelot Granger saith he was deluded by it, for he knew nothing of it, to have the leiftenant have the full power, he desires that it may abide as it is rather.

" Witness, Robert Brown."

It is to be hoped that Launcelot's daily conversation was in language more easily to be understood than the above.

At the end of the counter petition it says :

" So that of 68 petitioners (to Emery's petition) there is but 42 that pay rates."

Launcelot was not a land-owner at Newbury ; all that we find is the record of his leasing land. There were ninety-one grantees of land in Newbury prior to the time when Launcelot removed from the town, but his name does not appear among them.

Having given all that appears at Newbury of record about Launcelot, it might be well, before passing on, to refer to the condition of the town in which he lived, that we may judge of the surroundings of the family. Unless one is familiar with the history of the Puritans, there is much to interest and amuse the reader.

Newbury was a veritable hotbed of Puritanical bigotry and fanaticism ; more so, perhaps, than any other town. The brethren did not dwell in that peace and harmony which is directed by Holy Writ, but fought among themselves in a manner which is too often seen in the churches of to-day. For this the Rev. Mr. Parker, the minister, was largely to blame, and he was well supported in the contest by his assistant, the Rev. Mr. Noyes. If one would know the theology which the poor inhabitants had to believe, under pain of the displeasure of these reverend gentlemen, let him read the catechism prepared by Mr. Noyes and found in Coffin's history of Newbury.

The great ruction in the Newbury church, one which shook its members, other churches, and even the General Court, to their foundation, was over a question of church government. The minister claimed that he was the sole source of discipline and government, outside the church as well as in it ; that the people were as sheep, to follow implicitly the will and orders of the appointed shepherd, who could consider their wishes or not as he saw fit. But the greater number of the members declined to become sheep. They declared that in matters of government the majority should rule. Bitterly the contest raged for years ; it permeated all classes of society, and tore the little community into factions. A century afterwards its effects were plainly seen in the town. It brought trouble even into the military company, when a man who was elected sergeant, was objected to by Mr. Parker as unfit to hold the petty office, because he was "corrupt as to the Lord's Supper." And from it naturally grew dissensions between the people and the pastor over matters of faith, for we find that a company of soldiers from Newbury in the Indian war halted on their march to the front to discuss the question, "Whether we are under a covenant of grace or works." At first the majority suspended their pastor, but with a wonderful Christian spirit allowed him still to minister to them "as a gifted brother, to preach for the edification of the church, if he pleased."

The controversy extended beyond the bounds of Newbury, and sister churches were called in to settle the matter. In this they failed. Then appeal after appeal was had to the General Court, which repeatedly decided the matter, generally in favor of the minister. As far as the court was concerned, it last and finally decided it in 1671; the opponents of Mr. Parker, numbering forty-two, were each and all fined. But the fight went on, and not until the pugnacious minister was safely buried in the graveyard at the "Green" did the Church have peace.

Naturally, the bitterness of the fight tinctured everyday life, and family relations were subjected strictly to the Puritanical law. One tything man was appointed to each ten families, and their duty was to see that their charges violated no law, spiritual or civil. There were fourteen of these officers at Newbury, which would give a population of about seven hundred souls. Women were arrested for wearing silk bonnets, and heavily fined unless they proved that their husbands were worth at least two hundred pounds. Men were fined for wearing their hair below their ears. Some parties were having a "merrie discourse," when a health being drunk to all friends, William Snelling repeated the following "proverb:"

"I'll pledge my friend,
And for my foes,
A plague to their heels
And a poxe to their toes."

Poor William was reported to the Court at Salem, and, though he expressed in writing his regret that he was "so weak as to use a foolish proverb," yet he was fined ten shillings for "cussing."

Can my readers wonder that Launcelot and his pretty daughters may have been inclined to remove into the wilderness, where Parson Parker had no jurisdiction, and where the young men could repeat proverbs and the young women wear silk bonnets if they wished?

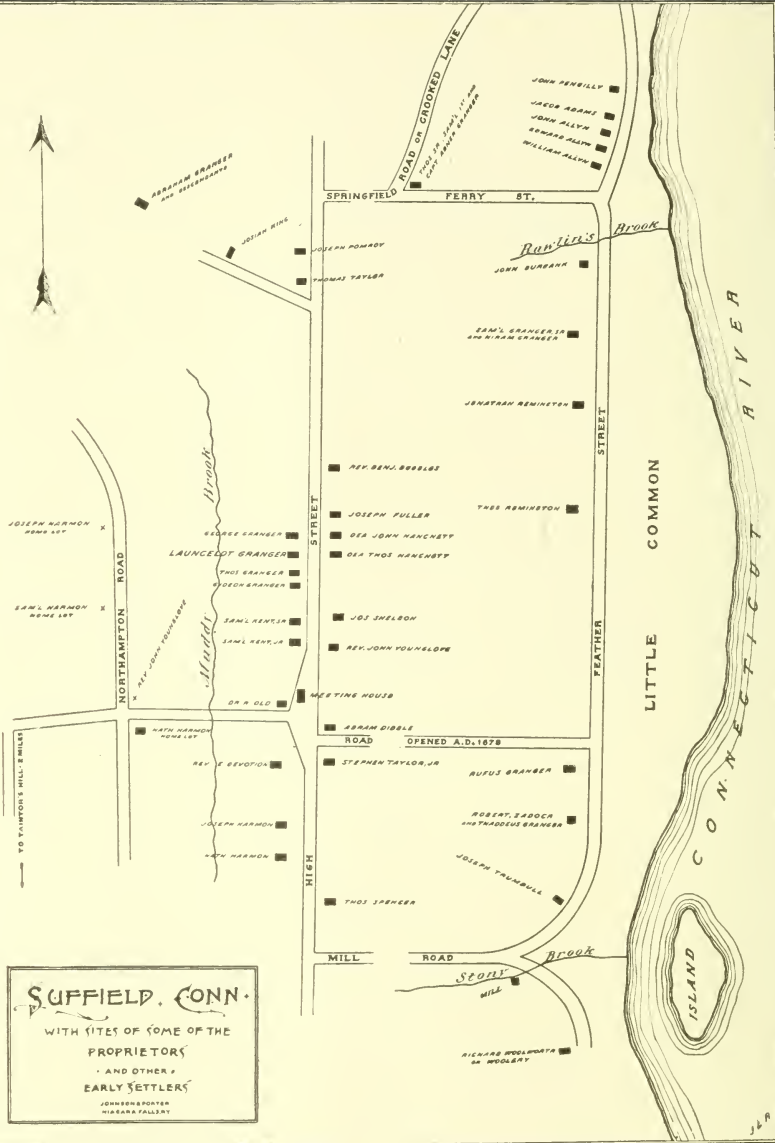

A complete list exists of the members of the church at Newbury, between 1654 and 1700. The name of Launcelot Granger does not appear in it. We may safely assume that he was not a church member or a freeman while living at Newbury.

to lay off the plantation, manage its affairs, receive its inhabitants, grant them lands in the plantation, and "order all prudentials."

At this time the Harmon brothers were engaged in hunting in the tract now known as Suffield, and making, perhaps, a hunter's home in the dense wilderness, but Lieut. Cooper, one of the committee, had a house just within the lines, on the banks of the great river. He was the commander of the militia at Springfield, next in rank to John Pynchon, and was killed at Springfield by the Indians at the time of the burning of the town, (September, 1675.) while hurrying to the village. The Indian title to Suffield had previously been purchased by Major Pynchon for one hundred dollars. Windsor, Connecticut, the next town south of Suffield, had been settled by a party from England under Captain Stiles in 1635.

The committee did not report to the court of their doings until June 3, 1674, alleging that they had awaited the settlement of the boundary question, but "as several families had settled there, they forbore further to delay." They reported that John Pynchon and Elizur Holyoke did on March 21, 1671, lay off the town, and had reserved the five hundred acres as directed. They urged that the township be exempt from rates for seven years, as an encouragement to emigrants, "it being a very woody place and difficult to winne." They recommended that the place be called "Suffield, an abbreviation of Southfield," it being south of Springfield. The court agreed to all they asked, save that it exempted the inhabitants from the payments of rates for only four years.

The committee, headed by Major Pynchon, and appointed by the General Court to manage the town, met for the first time in January, 1670-1. They decided, among other things, to grant land to settlers according to the rank and estate of the applicants; eighty acres to the first, sixty to the second, fifty to the third, and forty to the fourth rank. The town was laid out in three divisions. Along the banks of the Connecticut river, and running north and south, was laid out a road which was called (probably) Ferther street, because of its distance from the High street, and now is corrupted into Feather street. Three miles west, on the crest of a long hill, was located the High street, which also ran north and south, and still west of this, along the line of the main highway which ran from Northampton to Hartford, was located the third division. Settlers as they came in were allotted lands according to their rank, in one of the three divisions, but because of the troubles with the Indians, and, for their safety, each was given a "home lot" on the High street, where they lived, visiting their outlying lands as necessity required.

The first grant of lands was in 1670-1, to Samuel, Joseph, and Nathaniel Harmon, the three brothers whom I have mentioned. In 1670, 1671, and 1672, eight families only located in the town; in 1673 seven families came in and 1674 thirty settlers were granted land. Those who came during the first twelve years of its settlement were called "proprietors." The thirty-third actual settler or proprietor in Suffield was Launcelot Granger, who appeared there in 1674, as the following from the town records show :

Sept. 14, 1674. Granted to,

George Norton, 60 acres.

Launcelot Granger, 60 acres.

To Goodman Grangers,

Two sons, 40 acres apiece,

viz: Thomas Granger, 40 acres,

George Granger, 40 acres.

The boys were not yet of age, but by the custom of the time lands were granted to minors as well as adults.

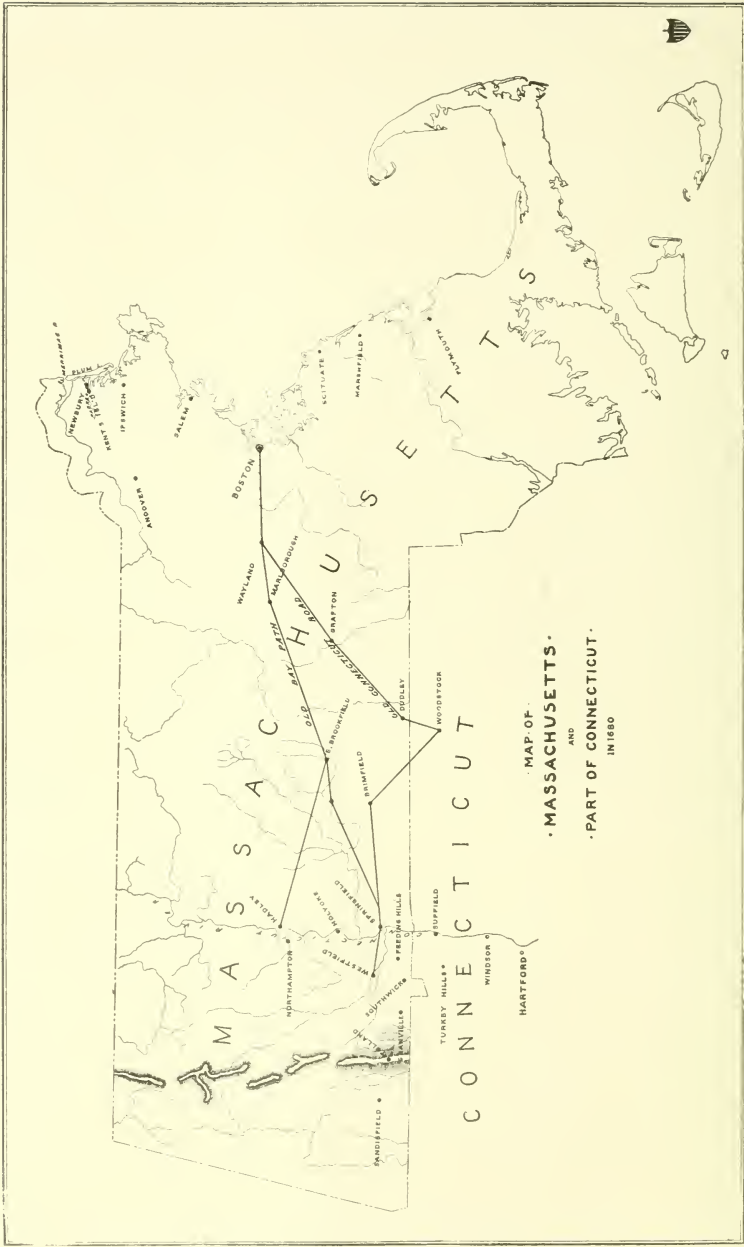

King Phillip's war soon disturbed the settlement, and all the inhabitants removed to safer quarters. It was not until after peace was assured that the committee again took up the distribution of lands, and on June 12, 1678, we find the final location of Launcelot on the High street.

For y^e settling of Goodm: Grangers Alotm^{ts} formerly granted; It is agreed that he shall ly on y^e west side of High Streete over ag't Edwd Burles or thereabout; There Goodm: Grangers hom lots to take place for himself & 2 sons, Thomas & George Granger, 12 rod broad each of them, wch is in y^e who'e 36 rod in breadth & to run in length fro' High Streete back to Muddy Brooke; p'vided his sons settle & Build on their lots in some short tyme. The rest of their land to be more remote.

The home lots assigned to Launcelot Granger and his two sons were among the choicest upon the High street, lying just north of the meeting-house, which may be called the center of the settlement. Each had a frontage of twelve rods upon the road, and each contained eight acres; Launcelot's lot was in the center, that of Thomas on the south, while George abutted on the north. Launcelot's lot is almost opposite the present Gay mansion in Suffield, and the famous Gideon Granger owned and lived upon the lot set off to Thomas.

Two routes of travel were common between the Bay colony and the Connecticut River country. By the river and the open sea most of the heavy goods and grain were sent, and even many passengers preferred it to the rougher hardships of the forest. The river also brought the settlers into even closer relationship with their brethren at Windsor, Hartford, and Saybrook than with those at Boston. Indeed, it was not uncommon to find them counseling with their nearest neighbors, and to Major Treat, the gallant and most successful Indian fighter of the valley, and his Connecticut troops, the Massachusetts towns frequently owed their salvation. The other route was across the hilly country to the east of Springfield, tedious in its length and difficult in its conditions. Settlers were frequently fourteen days in passing with their goods and cattle from Boston to Springfield. A word about this old road.

The earliest road was known as the "old Connecticut path," first a mere Indian trail, enlarged naturally by the increased travel which came upon it. Starting from Boston it passed through Framingham, Grafton, and Dudley to Woodstock, Conn. This point was a kind of four corners, for the trail from Narragansett, known as the "Providence path," and the "Nipmunk path," coming from New London, here intersected the "Connecticut path." Thence the trails extended, one to Hartford and one to Springfield. But in 1673 the road which afterward became an important line of travel was laid out and called the "Bay path." One will find constant references to it in all old records and books. It followed the Connecticut path from Cambridge along the Charles River to "Happy Hollow" in Wayland, where it branched, going direct by Marlborough and Worcester to Brimfield. Here it divided near the house of Joseph Walcott,* one branch going by Warren and Brimfield to Springfield, while the other ran west to Hadley. Over this Bay Path passed all the troops which, during King Philip's war, were pushed to the succor of the Connecticut River settlements. It was opened through in 1674.

But the path was not in 1678 a way of pleasure and of ease. It lay through a country rough and hilly. Little money was spent to open it up, and less to keep it in repair. I find that as late as 1700 only £5 was allowed to put it in order from Worcester to Brookfield. Few, if any, of the streams were bridged. It ran around the rocks, if possible, to avoid removing them, and swamps in wet weather rendered it quite impassable. It was a route which was marked sufficiently to be followed, and it was not much more. From Marlborough to Brookfield it was an unbroken wilderness. Passengers camped out, there being little accommodation for man or beast. As late as 1700 I find the inhabitants of Brookfield petitioning the General Court for aid in repairing it, in the following language:

Wee the subscribers being verry senceable of the inconveniencies that may happen in as much as the stated road to Conitticot, especially betwixt Wooster & Brookfield, is verry much incumbered with Trees fallen & many Rocky Swamps & other impassable Obstructions to Travellers, Drovers & others & hazzarding life or limb of both men and Horses & other creatures, to great Losses & Damages, Humbly propose, that there bee a Suitable allowance Granted to repaire & amend sd Road, at least to the sum of — pounds, Out of the Publique Treasurie of this Province, which we humbly leave to consideration and subscribe JOHN PYNCHON &c.

Over this rough trail, across the hills and vales, through the swamps and streams, and around the rocks, Joanna Granger and her ten children, with little Abraham hardly more than a babe in arms, pushed her way to join the husband and father in the tangled woods of Suffield and build up a new home on the banks of the great river.

CHAPTER VIII.

LAUNCELOT IN SUFFIELD.—THE MIGRATION OF HIS DESCENDANTS.

It is, of course, pure conjecture as to what induced Launcelot, a man of family, to leave his home in the settled part of the colony and plunge into the wilderness with a wife and ten children. But the books are full of what induced other men to remove into the newer country, and it is fair to assume that our ancestor was influenced by the same motives. Eastern Massachusetts was anything but an attractive farming country. It cost more to clear a farm in Essex County than the land was worth when cleared. Sand and rocks abounded; the soil was poor; the country, too, had not recovered from the terrible depression of 1640. For thirty years reports of the charming valley of the CONNETTICOTT had reached the eastern settlement. Its fair fields, so different from the rugged ones of the coast; its milder climate; its "Grate Ryver," which teemed with salmon and other fish, offered a picture to the struggling husbandmen of the stormy coast too alluring to be withstood. People flocked to the gentle valley and cast their lot among those who had gathered along the banks of the silvery river.

Probably such reasons induced Launcelot to cross by the Bay Path to these inviting regions in the summer of 1674 and in the newly-laid-off town of Southfield, or Suffield, to seek a new home. Whether he then brought with him his family is problematic; there are signs that say he did not. If so, they could not have followed him for several years, since the bitter and fatal war with King Philip soon broke out and stopped for a time all immigration into the valley. The war began in the summer of 1675, and Suffield was abandoned by all.

People left in haste, burying such valuables as they could not carry away. Some went to the south; others to the villages of Springfield and Westfield, a dozen miles away to the north. To the latter place went Launcelot Granger.

The inhabitants of Westfield, though ordered by the authorities to abandon their settlements, decided it was wiser to remain, though they were in the very vortex of the trouble. Peculiarly situated, they proceeded to fortify the place. Two rivers here come together, forming a letter V, and in the fork stood the village. The busy inhabitants erected a stockade across this V, and continued it down each river until it met at the point. The distance around the stockade was two miles, and within the large inclosed space stood the village and the fields, which the inhabitants cultivated with reasonable safety. To this house of refuge Launcelot went, and if his family were indeed in Suffield of course they accompanied him.

The Rev. Mr. Taylor, the minister of Westfield, says in his records regarding the Indian fight which occurred there on October 27, 1675:

Our soil was moistened by the blood of three Springfield men — young Goodman Dumbleton and two sons of Goodman Brooks, who came here to look for iron on land bought of J. Pynchon, Esq., who accompanied them, but they fell at the first fire of the enemy. This occurred after the murders at Northampton. At the same time the Indians burnt in Westfield the house of Mr. Cornish and John Sackett's house and barn with their contents. A Mr. Granger was seriously wounded in the leg at the same affair.

Drake, the able editor of "Hubbard's Indian Wars in New England," written in the latter part of the seventeenth century, and which describes the fight, assumes it was Launcelot Granger who was wounded. It is, moreover, well authenticated in the family that Launcelot was indeed wounded in the leg by the Indians and was extremely lame the balance of his life. Undoubtedly he was the unfortunate sufferer at Westfield.

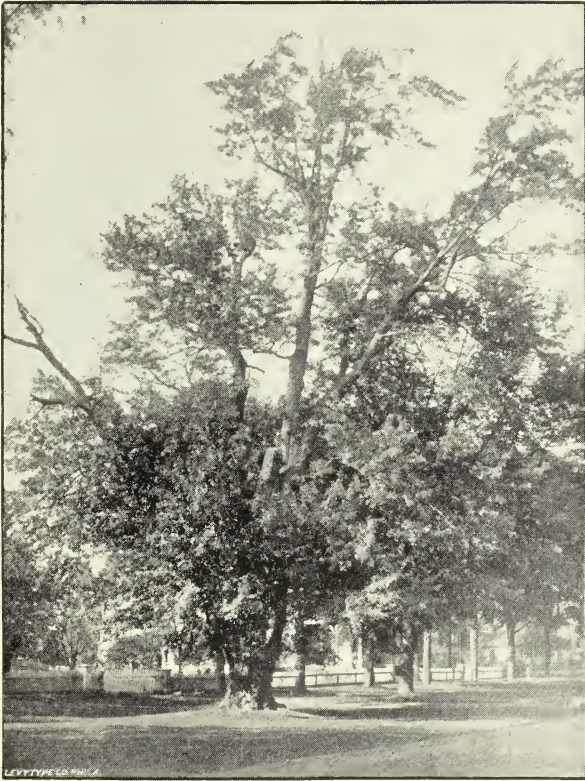

Launcelot was back in Suffield with his wife and ten of his eleven children, as we have seen, in 1678, when his home lot was set off to him. Henceforth he continued to reside there till his death in 1689. On his home lot he built his house, and at the same time he planted in the road in front of his dwelling a maple tree. This stands to-day by the wayside, knotted and twisted with age, one of the two old domestic trees of the town, and still known as the "Launcelot Granger tree." It stands directly opposite the Gay mansion on the High Street, and cannot be overlooked by any one seeking to find it. It seems as though some steps might be taken to preserve as far as possible this relic of our ancestor.

The first town meeting was held in Suffield on March 9, 1681-2, and the record shows thirty-four voters. Lines were drawn, Feather Street vs. High Street, and the latter won by a majority of six votes. Launcelot Granger is noted as voting with the majority. The town, now being organized, assumed the duty of allotting land, settling disputes regarding boundaries, and electing officers. The Land Measurer was a position of great importance in the young community, as can be well imagined. Many and delicate were the duties which would naturally be placed in the hands of the town's surveyor. The record of the meeting says: "Goodm: Granger chosen Measurer of Land to be Lay'd out in Suffield for y^e year ensuing." He was reelected several times, serving his last term a year before his death.

Besides the home lot on the High Street Launcelot and his two sons were granted lands for farming "more remote." Where the elder Granger's farm was I cannot ascertain, but at a town meeting held December 25, 1685, a piece of land for a farm was allotted to his son Thomas. It lay on the east side of the Springfield road, afterward known as Crooked Lane, and descended from father to son till it was sold by his grandson, Captain Abner Granger, in 1806, just prior to his removal to Buffalo, N. Y.

Launcelot Granger died at his house in Suffield on the 3d day of September, A. D. 1689. He was buried in the graveyard which stood opposite the meeting-house on the High Street. The church of the present day, a fine brick building, abuts the graveyard, and under the very shadow of its walls is the ground in which all the proprietors and their families were laid to rest. No stone marks his grave (its exact spot is unknown), but both Launcelot and Joanna sleep their last sleep on the crest of that gentle Suffield hill which overlooks a valley teeming with wealth and marked with a beauty rarely to be found elsewhere in the land.

It was not until after the death of Launcelot that his Suffield family commenced to separate and wander to different parts of the country. His oldest son, John, had left the paternal roof in Newbury directly he was married, and had removed to the neighboring town of Andover, throwing his lot with his wife's family, the Poors. He was given a farm by his father-in-law, which lay directly across the road from the Poor home, and here John settled, lived, and died. Here, until about the beginning of the nineteenth century, some of his descendants lived. Indeed, as far as it can be ascertained, it was not till his grandson Daniel removed to West Springfield, Mass., about 1750, that any of John's descendants quit Andover. To-day the name has completely disappeared from the town. John, the younger brother of Daniel, was the next to leave, and he took up a new home and a second wife in New Braintree, a few miles south of Boston. In the next generation the movement from Andover was northward to Maine, and the representatives speedily strung themselves along the New England coast till they reached from Eastport, Me., to Cape Cod. Then the New Braintree family sent (about 1800) a number of representatives to Randolph, Vt., and from them have sprung a large and flourishing branch who claim allegiance to the State of the Green Mountains. But it must be remembered that, while a large number of the Vermont Grangers trace their ancestry back to the gallant Captain John of New Braintree, yet it is more than probable that the major portion of those who have lived in that State came either from Suffield or from another Captain John Granger of Bristol, R. I., whom it is impossible to connect with Launcelot. It is not improbable that these Bristol Grangers came from the British colonies in the West Indies.

cott and followed him to his new home in North Brookfield, midway between Springfield and Worcester, Mass. Here she met her tragic fate, which is described in a later page. Her brother Robert, a single man, followed her to the same place, where he too met a violent death seventeen years after her's. It is a remarkable incident that the sister was the first victim in Massachusetts of that terrible French and Indian war which broke out in 1692, while the brother was the last.

Somewhere toward 1720 the first entire family left Suffield. George, the son of Launcelot, had trouble with the town authorities, and undoubtedly felt it imperative to leave. He did not go far — only five miles west till he had crossed the line into the neighboring town of Simsbury, where he settled in the parish of Turkey Hills. Here he and many of his children lived and died, but some of them moved away. His son George, who has made himself memorable as the husband of three wives and the father of seven children by each wife, wandered north to the township of Westfield in Massachusetts, where he found sufficient room for his increasing progeny. From this second George many hundreds of people have sprung. The rest of Launcelot's children remained in Suffield until their deaths.

By the middle of the eighteenth century the emigration of Grangers from Suffield had been very heavy. They had few of them gone far, because there were few places to go to. They went west to Simsbury, Hartland, and the other towns which lay toward the New York border, or northerly to Westfield. When the meadows and plains at the eastern slope of the mountains became well settled they climbed the hills. Some settled on the slopes at Granville and Blandford, some stopped on the summit at Tolland, but many more, just at the close of the Revolution, passed over to the charming valley of the Housatonic in the Berkshire country and took up farms at Sandisfield, Monterey, and the adjoining towns.

A Westfield family (Daniel, b. 16 September, 1710) was, I believe, the first to settle west of New England. They went before the Revolution to what was known as the Skeensborough District in the then county of Charlotte, N. Y. This district comprised all the country between Lake George and the present Vermont line, and in it lay Whitehall, Granville, and other towns associated with the early Grangers. But after the Revolution, and as the land in central New York and northern Ohio was opened to settlement, the rush began. The families from Turkey Hills, descendants of the George who was forced to leave Suffield, settled at Phelps in Ontario County, N. Y., and spread over the country north to Sodus on Lake Ontario. As they grew this family again became restless, and from central New York they went by scores to Michigan. I believe the bulk of the large family in the latter State are descended from the Phelps Grangers. To-day there is but one family bearing the name in Phelps.

The beginning of the Revolution found a goodly number of Grangers still living at Suffield. There were twenty-seven heads of families there in 1775 who paid taxes. To-day there are but four taxpayers in the place who bear the name of Granger: Timothy Granger, who came from the George who lived at Turkey Hills, resides a half mile west of the meeting-house; Fernando Granger, a single man, lives in the old home at Taintor's Hill, three miles southwest, which was built by his ancestor, Captain John, one hundred and fifty years ago; Julius Granger, who came from Abraham, the youngest son of Launcelot, lives at West Suffield; while Francis Granger, a single man, lives on the old place on Feather Street, facing the Connecticut River, which has been in the possession of his branch of the family almost, if not quite, from the time of his ancestor, Samuel, the son of Launcelot Granger.

 EXPLANATION.

Each person is given a number in the left hand or index column. If he appears again, you will find a number opposite his name in the right hand or reference column, which shows where to look. The Reference column always refers to the Index column; the latter refers to nothing.

THOMAS GRANGER,

s. of Launcelot, b. ? at Newbury, Mass.; d. 14 March, 1729-30, at Suffield, Ct.; m. 14 Nov., 1683, to Mindwell, dau. of Stephen Taylor and Elizabeth Newell, of Windsor, Ct. She b. 5 Nov., 1663. They lived at Suffield, Ct.

Thomas Granger was one of the oldest of Launcelot's children, but the date of his birth cannot be found. He was granted, in September, 1674, forty acres of land in Suffield, together with a "home lot" on the High Street twelve rods wide and containing eight acres. It adjoins on the north the lands of the present Connecticut Literary Institute. On June 12, 1678, and after King Philip's war, the lands were confirmed to Thomas, together with other lands to George, "p'vided his sons (Launcelot's) sitte and Build on their lots in some short tyme; the rest of their lands to ly more remote." On December 25, 1685, he was granted land on "y^e east side of the highe-way that leads to Springfield." This road is now known as Crooked Lane, and was probably part of the forty acres first granted. It remained in the hands of his descendants until it was sold by his grandson, Captain Abner Granger, in 1806.

Thomas was a man of much importance in the new town. He was selectman as early as 1694, and later held other town offices. On September 21, 1722, the town voted "That Thomas Granger, Sr., do take the second pew for his seat" (in the meeting-house). As seats were allotted by the town officers according to (1) estate, (2) age, (3) office, (4) place or improvement made, the granting of the second seat would imply that the grantee was a man of the highest standing in the community.

In 1708-9 he was appointed one of a committee of three to build a bridge (the first in Suffield) over Stony Brook. It was completed by this energetic committee in 1715 at an expense of $41, and the town showed its appreciation of their engineering skill by voting Thomas 8 shillings for his six years' work.

His wife was the youngest daughter of Stephen Taylor, a prominent resident of the neighboring town of Windsor. Her brother, Thomas Taylor, married Thomas Granger's sister Hannah.

33 GEORGE GRANGER,

s. of Launcelot ; b. 28 Nov., 1658, at Newbury, Mass. ; d. at Turkey Hills in Simsbury, Ct. ; m. 26 April, 1693, to Lydia, dau. of Rev. John Younglove and Sarah ——— of Suffield, Ct.

George Granger was granted a lot upon the High Street of Suffield next north to that given his father, and sold it in 1714 for £45 to Captain Asaph Leavitt. He was not married until 1693, and probably then lived in the village, although at one time he had a farm of fifty acres.

The Rev. John Younglove was the first minister of Suffield. He was a native of Ipswich, Mass., and had preached for a time at North Brookfield, where he seems to have given no satisfaction. He then taught school at Hadley until his removal to Suffield in 1680. But here his old misfortune followed him. He antagonized his congregation against him, and seems to have been in constant conflict with them. On April 18, 1690, the town finally voted to petition the General Court "against Mr. Younglove's preaching any longer amongst us." His temper is said to have impaired his usefulness. Worn out by his long struggle to maintain a large family, and broken hearted at his failure in Suffield, he died June 3, 1690. His blood flows in the veins of many Suffield people to-day.

George Granger married the minister's daughter Lydia on April 26, 1693, and made no more of a success in supporting a family than did his father-in-law at expounding the Word. Indeed, before his marriage he had shown himself to be a shiftless fellow. In the old court records of 1691 I find "George Granger of Suffield being presented to this court for neglecting publick worship of God, &c., petitioning this court pleading his sickness, weakness, and want of clothes this cold winter, this court ordered that the worshipful Col. Pynchon send for him, before him, and admonish him." Like all the men of that day he became the father of a large number of children. Soon after his marriage he seems to have risen to the dignity of a fence viewer, but that appears to have ended his office holding in the town. On November 29, 1716, the town voted "To be at the charge at present with respect of the wife of George Granger," and also "To be at the charge of a petition to send to the General Court to see what may be don with respect to the maintenance of the wife of George Granger"; and further voted "To allow Goodman Banes seven shillings for his trouble about keeping the wife of George Granger."

On June 19, 1717, the town voted "To sue George Granger for the money which the town had necessarily expended on his wife or may expend for her relief before process be made in the law thereabout"; also, "The town did by a clear vote make choice of John Kent, Jr., in their behalf to sue George Granger as above voted, and to proceed therein as Captain Ebenezer Pumrey shall advise."

On October 7, 1717, the town voted: "It is agreed and voted that upon condition that John Granger the son of George Granger do take care of his mother will give the Town of Suffield sufficient security in the judgement of the Selectmen to secure the town from any future charge with respect to his mother Liddia Granger; that then the Town will defray all charge that has been passed with respect to the said Liddia Granger and quit—all other perticular persons excepting only the bond of thirty shillings given to the Selectmen by the said John Granger; but if the said John Granger do not speedily do as aforesaid, then to proceed to sue George Granger according to a former vote of the Town."

On November 29 it was voted: "The Town granted William Huxley half a crown for digging George Granger's child's grave."

Evidently these attempts to force husband or son to support the wife and mother were failures, for ten years afterward the town voted "To alow three shillings a week for the keeping of Liddia Granger," and still later voted "To bare the charge of caring [carrying] Liddia Granger the wife of George Granger to the House of Correction" [poor-house].

Poor Lydia's last appearance as a town charge was in December, 1724, and it may be presumed she soon after died in the poor-house neglected by husband and children. These unhappy events, however, seem to have driven George and all his children from Suffield, and few, if any, of his descendants ever since have lived within its bounds. George and his family settled in the parish of Turkey Hills in the adjoining town of Simsbury (now East Granby) about five miles west from the Suffield meeting-house. Here they lived, married, and died for several generations, but to-day only one of the name remains in East Granby.

The Burbanks were from Rowley, Mass., the adjoining town to Newbury. John, Sr., lived at Haverhill, Mass., after his marriage on 15 October, 1663, and removed to Suffield in 1680, being a proprietor. His wife died 16 October, 1690, and he married twice again. He was a large landowner and a prominent man. He lived at the north end of Feather street, near the river. His son John, husband of Mary Granger, was also prominent in all town matters. He was elected surveyor, tithingman (an important office), constable, gauger and sealer of casks, assessor, town treasurer, and served repeatedly as selectman.

Victory (or Vicary, as he was called) Sikes belonged to the Springfield family, and early emigrated to Suffield.

He rose to prominence in the new town, holding even to the time of his death many important offices. He disputed with Launcelot Granger the office of land surveyor. He was thrice married, Elizabeth being his second wife.

Robert Old (or Ould) married Susannah Hosford at Windsor, Ct., and had by her 9 children, one of whom, Mindwell, was the first white child born in Suffield. Susannah died January 6, 1688, and he married Dorothy Granger, as above. He died January 16, 1728, and a small slab in the old burying-ground marks his grave. His ancestry is unknown. He was never a freeman. He practiced medicine and was called doctor, though probably not strictly deserving the title. His last residence was at the corner of the High Street and the road now leading to the railway station. Some of his sons removed to West Springfield and Westfield, Mass., and were the ancestors of the Old's, or Olds as the names were later spelled, of those towns.

Besides attending to the suffering, "Dr." Old sometimes occupied his time in making and laying brick. The town records say:

At a leagall meeting of the Inhabitants of Suffield January y^e 27 1695-96: it was agreed and voted, to employ Goodman Old in building the chimneys for the minister's house, and accordingly said Old did then promise and covenant to and with the towne to build a stock of chimneys in said house, with five tunnels; and to carry it up from the bottome of the celler; which chimneys he, the said Old, doth engage to build according to his best art and skill, and in all respects substantial, compleat, and workmanlike, and to finishe the same by the middle of May next ensuing the date hereof," etc.

dau. of Launcelot; b. at Newbury, Mass.; d. 27 July, 1693, at North Brookfield, Mass.; m. 4 March, 1686, to Joseph, s. of John Woolcot of Ipswich, Mass. He b. 2 Feb., 1663-4; d. 1710. They lived at North Brookfield, Mass.

The tragic story of Rebecca Granger is found in every history of Massachusetts. Her husband was born at Newbury, where undoubtedly he knew Rebecca. His father, John, had formerly lived in Ipswich, and when some of the inhabitants of that place founded the town of Brookfield, midway between Springfield and Worcester, in Massachusetts, Joseph and his brothers removed hither, being later followed by their father. Joseph seems to have renewed at Suffield his acquaintance with his old friends the Grangers, and later married Rebecca. One child was born to them at Suffield and two at Springfield. Joseph had taken up a little farm of forty-five acres in what is now known as North Brookfield, in 1687, and hither the little family removed after the birth of their last child.

In the years 1691 and 1692 the English colonies sent a military expedition by sea which sailed up the St. Lawrence to within sight of Quebec, and then sailed home again. In revenge, Count Frontenac, in the summer of 1693, dispatched a party of about forty Canadian Indians to attack the Massachusetts settlements, and especially Nashaway, now Lancaster. But, being strangers to the country, their progress was slow, and after two months in the wilderness determined to attack the first town found by them. It proved to be Brookfield.

On the morning of July 27, 1693, Joseph Woolcot was at work on his farm some distance from the house, when Rebecca, "being fearful," as the old record says, took her children and went out to meet him. She had seen an Indian lurking in the woods near by. At once they returned to the house, where the husband discovered that his gun and other things were missing, and looking out the window he saw an Indian coming toward the dwelling. Rebecca, by direction of her husband, took her two little girls and crept into the bush, where she hid. Joseph took the little boy under his arm, and, calling his dog, which was large and strong, started out to meet the Indian. The dog proved Joseph's savior. He attacked the Indian, who emptied his gun into the brute, killing him. With a broadaxe Joseph then pursued the savage, who, loading as he ran, soon caused Joseph to flee in turn. With his little boy he made his way through the woods to the fort, several miles away, where he gave the alarm. Poor Rebecca hiding in the woods could not control herself, even in the time of utmost peril, and, crying out, "discovered herself" to the savages, who immediately dispatched her and her children.

But revenge came quickly. A messenger had notified the famous Major Pynchon, the commander at Springfield, who at once dispatched Captain Cotton and a force of mounted men to the rescue. At Brookfield he found that the Indians had started north, and at once followed with a force of forty-two men, pushing on night and day through the rough wilderness until the horses gave out. Then dismounting and divesting themselves of all superfluous clothing, the captain pressed on with twenty-three men. The sun being a quarter of an hour high the next morning they came up with the enemy at breakfast, and, quietly pushing their guns through the bush, killed six at the first fire. Others crawled off into the woods to die, and it is said fourteen were killed in all. The balance left without even taking their guns. A more gallant pursuit in either savage or other warfare was never made.

Rebecca was the first victim in Massachusetts of that terrible war with the French and Indians, and by a strange coincidence her brother Robert, who was killed near the same spot in 1709, was the last.

s. of Launcelot; b. 2 Aug., 1668, at Newbury, Mass.; d. 22 April, 1721, at Suffield; m. 16 May, 1700, to Esther, dau. of Dea. John Hanchett and Esther Pritchett of Suffield, Ct. She b. 1 Aug., 1678; d. 21 May, 1721. They lived at Suffield, Ct.

Samuel Granger was a farmer, as were all his brothers. In March, 1695-6, he petitioned the town for an allotment of forty acres, and it was granted him November 29, 1697. He took but little interest in town politics, the positions of fence-viewer and "surveighor of wayes" being the only offices he held. Evidently he confined himself closely to his farm and family. Neither he nor his wife lived beyond middle age. The court record of Samuel is confined to an entry in 1700, in which both he and his wife figured to their cost in £40. Interested readers are referred to the books in the office of the county recorder of deeds in Springfield, Mass., for full particulars.

Esther Granger, his wife, was one of the daughters of Dea. John Hanchett, a man prominent for many years in Suffield. The name is variously given by Savage as Hansett, Hanchett, Hanshat, Hanshut, and Hanshett. John Hanchett was in Boston in 1634 with the Rev. Mr. Wilson, one of the leading ministers of the time. He was made a freeman May 17, 1637, and removed to Braintree, where he died. His burial is noted by John Eliot as the burial of "old John Hanchett." His brother Thomas removed to Wethersfield, Ct., in 1649, where his son John, the deacon, was born to him that year. Father and son removed to Suffield in 1679, and the former died June 11, 1686. Both were among the original proprietors of the town, and their home lot was directly across the High Street from that of Launcelot Granger. Dea. John was the last of the "proprietors" to die, and the old homestead on the High Street, which for generations had passed down from father to son, went out of the family but a few years since. Dea. John had lived at Westfield, Mass., for a short time, possibly during King Philip's war, where he married Esther Pritchett of Suffield, and his two eldest children were born there. But he removed to Suffield in time to vote at its first town meeting. After the death of his first wife he married in succession Mary Harmon, Sarah Taylor, and Mary Southwell. Happily Mary survived him, else he might have made another venture, since he was only eighty-four years of age when he was last married. Dea. Hanchett was always prominent in public matters, rising to the dignity of selectman in civil affairs and deacon on the religious side of the town, for town and church were practically one in those days. From his father, Thomas, were descended all of that name, who have scattered along the Connecticut Valley. Dea. John died October 23, 1744 — "a very old man," says the record.

HANNAH (GRANGER) TAYLOR,

dau. of Launcelot; b. at Newbury, Mass.; d. 9 Sept., 1729, at Suffield; m. to Thomas, s. of Stephen Taylor and Elizabeth Newell of Windsor, Ct. He b. 5 Oct., 1655; d. 6 Jan., 1741. They lived at Suffield.

Thomas Taylor was the brother of Mindwell Taylor, who married Thomas Granger (No. 3). The Taylors were among the oldest settlers of the adjoining town of Windsor. Thomas had been married before, his wife being Abigail, daughter of Hugh Roe of Suffield, by whom he had four children. She died October 13, 1691. The father-in-law (Roe) evidently had a poor idea of Thomas, as in leaving his daughter a legacy by will he declared that "Thomas Taylor shall have noething to do with it, because of his ill conduct." After the death of his second wife, Thomas became a town charge, and at town meeting November 25, 1740, there was voted "to William Allien in Town pay, Twelve Shillings per Week for keeping and bording Thomas Taylor, Twenty-one weeks Last past." Thomas was the last but one of the "proprietors" to die.

Abraham was the youngest of Launcelot's children, being hardly more than a babe in arms when the family removed to Suffield. He too was a farmer, and his first wife was the sister of the wife of his brother Samuel, but the record of the date of the marriage is lost. Indeed, much important data regarding Abraham is wanting, including the name of his second wife. Hannah Hanchett died at the birth of her child.

His farm lay in the northern part of the town, on the present road to Westfield (then but a path), and is still (1892) owned by one of his descendants, Mrs. Katherine Leonard,* daughter of the late Captain John Granger.

	Thomas Granger was a farmer and brickmaker. His farm lay on the road which turns west from the High street, about a mile north from the meeting-house. He several times held the office of constable and surveyor of highways. His wife was the daughter of John Allen (or Allyn). John Allen came from Scotland in 1636. He had been a soldier under Cromwell, and settled in Dedham in 1649. Afterward he was in Ipswich, removing with his family to Suffield in 1679. His wife was Mary Kimball. His son John married Esther Pritchett (afterward called Pritchard) 11 Feb., 1682, and their daughter married Thomas Granger, Jr. John's farm was next his father's on the river bank, but he and his wife afterward removed to Deerfield, Mass., where they were both killed by the Indians 11 May, 1704.

Samuel, Joseph, and Nathaniel Harmon were three brothers and "mighty hunters." Together they had roamed over the present limits of Suffield, pursuing their calling, and ten years before the town was settled had endeavored to procure a grant of it. They lived at Springfield, where Samuel died 7 Sept., 1677. Joseph, Sr., was born at Springfield, 1647, and married Hannah Filley of Windsor, Ct., in 1673. She died at Suffield in 1729, and he in October the same year. The three brothers were the first settlers in the town, and the ancestors of that large family of Harmons who have been identified for more than two centuries with Suffield. Joseph, Sr., was a man very prominent in town affairs, holding for years the office of selectman besides minor positions. He was the captain of the Suffield militia company in 1708, a position of much importance in early days in view of the constant Indian troubles. His son Joseph married Elizabeth Granger. While not as prominent as his father, Joseph, Jr., took much interest in town matters, and for nearly a quarter of a century occupied various town offices, finally being elected as selectman in 1702-3.

Lieut. John Pengilly settled first at Ipswich, Mass., and was either Welsh or Cornish. He was a soldier in the Narragansett expedition in 1675, and was a proprietor of Suffield in 1678. He held many town offices, and died 20 May, 1735. His farm was on the river bank, next to the Allen place. His son John, born at Suffield, married Mary Granger. He too was a man of great prominence in the town. For years he was chosen moderator at town meeting "to manage ye meeting." Not a committee seems to have been appointed on important matters but what he was a member. In this way he seems to have made himself useful, as he occupied no regular town office. He was a farmer, and lived near the ferry on his father's place. The name has now entirely disappeared from Suffield.

CROOKED LANE, SUFFIELD, CONN.
From homestead of Samuel ye 1st.

Samuel Granger ye 1st was a farmer, and lived on the homestead of his father, Thomas, on the Springfield road, now called Crooked Lane, about a mile and a half north of the meeting-house. He gave little attention to town matters, rising no higher than hog reeve and fence viewer. He was called captain, and it is presumed he must have commanded the militia company. To distinguish him from others of the same name he was called "ye first." It was customary in old times, when several of the same name were living in a town, to call one ye first, another ye second, etc., according to the date of their birth. There were five men named Samuel Granger living in Suffield at one time.

Joseph Pomroy lived at Northampton, where he was a blacksmith. He was born there 26 June, 1672, and married Hannah Seymour 29 Nov., 1692. In 1699 the town of Suffield voted "To give to Joseph Pomroy for Inheritance fourty acres of land; but with this provisall, or on these conditions, that he the said Pomroy, settle, abide and remain in the Town for the space or full tearm of seven years, and during said tearm to follow his trade for the benefit of the Town. May it please the lord to bless him with life, health and strength soe to doe." He removed to Suffield and received the blessing, since he survived more than the "tearm of seven years," dying 16 Dec., 1712. He was the ancestor of the large number of Pomroys or Pomeroyes who lived in Suffield and frequently intermarried with the Grangers, even to a late day. His daughter married Samuel ye 1st. Joseph Pomroy was the son of Medad of Northampton, who was a son of Eltwood Pomroy, the Puritan, who came to Dorchester, Mass., in 1630, from Devonshire, England.

Holcomb and Ann Pettibone of Simsbury, Ct. She b. 1708; d. 27 Dec., 1788. They lived at Simsbury, Ct.

John Granger lived at Suffield until the troubles regarding his mother and narrated under the head of his father. George (No. 33) forced the entire family to remove into the adjoining town of Simsbury. Here John took up a farm in the parish of Turkey Hills, in what is now East Granby, and the town records say, "Old John Granger died ye 6 Sept., 1788." An old Simsbury record says, "Christopher Jacob Lawton of Suffield sells to John Granger land at Turkey Hills in Simsbury, March 1, 1734." This was probably his homestead.

George Granger lived first in the parish of Turkey Hills, in Simsbury, now part of East Granby, where the children by the first wife were born. He then removed to Westfield, Mass., living in that part now known as Southwick, and after the third marriage lived at West Granville. He had twenty-one children in all. The destruction of the town records by fire renders it impossible to give all his children.

DANIEL GRANGER,

s. of George; b. 16 Sept., 1710, at Suffield, Ct.; m. 1 March, 1733, to Elizabeth Old of Westfield, Mass.

Daniel Granger first lived at Westfield, Mass., where he took up land (ten acres) in January, 1733-4, but later seems to have removed to near Whitehall, N. Y., with most of his children. When an old man he joined the army in the Revolution and served as a drummer. It is reported of him that in one engagement his finger was shot nearly off, hanging by a piece of skin only, and, his attention being called to it, he tore it away and went on with his drumming. It is believed that the town he died in is Granville, N. Y., but this is not a matter of certainty.

Captain John Granger lived on Taintor's Hill, in the west part of Suffield, and his house, which he built in 1750, is still occupied by his great grandson, Fernando Granger. In 1775 he was assessed at a valuation of £90. For years he was captain of one of the militia companies of the town. He was elected surveyor of highways, tithingman, constable, and finally selectman in 1743. He was a deputy in the Colonial Legislature in 1769 and 1770. Taintor's Hill, the residence of Captain John Granger and his descendants even to this day, was named for Michael Taintor of Windsor.

Captain Abraham, as he was always called, was a man more prominent in town matters than his father. He repeatedly held office, being a deputy to the General Court or Colonial Legislature in 1774, 1775, 1776, 1781, 1782, 1783, 1784, 1785, 1786, and 1787. His name often appears in the town records, and he was a man of force and character. He lived in the north part of the town, probably near his father's farm. He was captain of the militia company, and, despite his years, marched to Boston at the "Lexington alarm" in 1775.

s. of Samuel; b. 23 May, 1734, at Andover, Mass; d. 21 Jan., 1783, at New Braintree, Mass.; m. (1) 11 May, 1757, to Hannah Messer at Methuen, Mass. She d. 1760. (2) 16 June, 1763, Rebecca Haskell of New Braintree.

Captain John Granger was the ancestor of a large family who have lived principally in Massachusetts and Vermont. He lived in Andover (?) for some time after his first marriage, but after the death of his wife he removed to New Braintree, which was henceforth his home.

John Granger, called Captain John by his descendants, was in the fifth generation from Launcelot—the last generation who were born, married, and died at Andover. With the death of his unmarried nieces and nephews the name became extinct in that town. John first married in the neighboring town of Methuen, Mass., but his wife lived little more than a year. Whether he lived with her in Andover or Methuen is not quite certain. But after her death he removed to Boston, and finally settled at New Braintree, a few miles out of the city. His older brother Daniel had already grown weary of the Andover hills and emigrated to West Springfield, and John too was unable to remain on the ancestral acres. At New Braintree he found his second wife in Miss Haskell, a woman of great beauty. Here he built the comfortable house known as the “old Granger homestead,” and now occupied by his grandson, Daniel Granger. It is charmingly situated in that old town, and is one of the features of the place. Here he made his home and here he died, as above.

* Joseph Pierpont (above) had one son by this marriage named Hudson Williams, who became an officer in the United States Navy and died in France.

Captain John seems to have been more or less a born soldier. We find him engaged in the Indian wars which swept over the country when he was a young man. In 1755 he joined one of the English expeditions which marched north from Albany toward the Lake Champlain country, and was present at the fierce battle which took place at Halfway Brook, between Fort William Henry and Fort Edward. There is a tradition that he was present at the defeat of General Braddock, but this is too misty and uncertain to admit of serious consideration, it being a matter of history that that fatal expedition was composed of British regulars, Virginia militia, and two independent companies from New York. It is doubtful if any New England men were members of it, much more so that John left his Andover home to fight the French and Indians in that far-off western country. There were plenty of foes nearer home.

On the coming of the news of the Lexington fight in April, 1775, known in history as the Lexington alarm, John Granger formed at New Braintree a company of soldiers called in the parlance of the time minute men, and hastened to the aid of the imperiled section. As soon as an organized army was formed he was made captain of a regular company in Colonel Larned's regiment and joined the forces at Cambridge. He is said to have taken part in the battle of Bunker Hill and the siege of Boston. But the severities of the campaign proved too great for him, and he was forced to resign after some eight months of service. He withdrew to his New Braintree home and lingered there until he died at the age of only forty-nine.

SAMUEL GRANGER YE 4TH.

s. of Samuel ye 1st; b. 5 Jan., 1733-4, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 19 Aug., 1818, at Suffield; m. 29 Nov., 1764, to Anna, daughter of Deacon Aaron Lyman and Eunice Dwight of Belchertown, Mass. She b. 28 July, 1737; d. 5 Dec., 1815. They lived at Suffield.

Captain Samuel Granger was perhaps the best-known officer from Suffield in the Revolutionary army, and even to this day the older people repeat anecdotes regarding him and his services. He had served in the French war, being quartermaster-sergeant in the First Regiment of Connecticut colonial troops, and present at the taking of Montreal in 1760. When the news of the fight at Lexington in 1775 reached Suffield he joined the company of minute men raised by Captain Elihu Kent and hastened toward Boston. He later was appointed a first lieutenant in the eighth company of Colonel Walcott's State regiment, and was before Boston from January to March, 1776. He then became first lieutenant in Colonel Ward's Connecticut regiment, and was in New Jersey. On 1 Jan., 1777, he was commissioned captain in the Second Connecticut line regiment, which position he resigned 24 Dec., 1777. He then became captain in Colonel Wells's regiment, and on 5 May, 1781, joined the regiment of General Waterbury as a captain. He finally became a captain in the Continentals, or regulars, and served until the close of the war. He then returned to Suffield and resumed the avocation of farming, which he continued till he died.

Deacon Lyman, father of Mrs. Granger, was one of the first settlers in Belchertown, Mass. He was in the third generation from Richard Lyman, the ancestor of all the Lymans of colonial times in America.

Suffield. He was a skillful farmer, which occupation he followed till the time of his death, interlarding it with the spice of war whenever occasion allowed. Like his brother Samuel, he was a natural soldier. He joined the First Regiment of Connecticut colonial troops in 1758 as quartermaster-sergeant, and was present at the bloody battle of Crown Point in that year. In 1760 he was at the taking of Montreal. Mr. Granger married after the war Experience King, daughter of Josiah King, Esq., of Suffield. Mr. King was a Northampton (Mass.) man, and removed to Suffield in 1725, where his daughters were born. Probably no other family of girls were at that time so famous in Suffield as the King girls. They were noted for their extreme cleverness and good looks. They all found husbands: Lydia married Deacon Richard Gay of Turkey Hills; Mindwell married Joseph Pease and became the mother of Mrs. Gideon Granger of Canandaigua, and of Seth Pease, the surveyor who laid out Cleveland, O.; Experience married Captain Granger; and Rhoda married Consider Williston of Suffield.

Captain Abner continued to live at the old homestead of his father and grandfather on Crooked Lane until September, 1806, when he removed with his wife and family to Buffalo, N. Y., where his son Erastus had located. He at once took charge of the large farm of his son, and conducted it on shares until he died.

Captain Granger's army record was of the best. At the breaking out of the Revolution he and his five brothers all entered the army. In 1776 he was with the troops in front of Boston, and later was commissioned second lieutenant in Captain Phineas Lovejoy's company of the Third Battalion of Connecticut troops, and with it served in Rhode Island and Connecticut. Discharged in March, 1777, he soon received a command in Colonel Eno's regiment of Connecticut troops, and was commissioned captain. Henceforth he served steadily at the front with the main body of the Continental army. He participated in the battles about New York, in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and spent that terrible winter at Valley Forge. After the war closed he returned to Suffield and resumed his farming.

He was in Buffalo at the time the British attacked that village in 1813, and, while not an active combatant, saw the smoke from the burning buildings and heard the booming of the cannon. The Buffalo Gazette of 26 Oct., 1816, truly described him in an obituary notice as "a veteran of three wars."

Elisha Granger was a farmer living on the east slope of "the mountain" in Turkey Hills parish in the (then) town of Simsbury, Ct. This part of the town has since been erected into the town of East Granby. In the early part of 1789 his sons Elihu and Pierce, inspired by the excitement in the neighborhood growing out of the land speculations in central New York of their neighbor Oliver Phelps of Suffield, went through the wilderness to prepare a new home at what is now Phelps, N. Y. (See Elihu.) Elisha accompanied his boys, but returned to Turkey Hills in the autumn. In 1797 he finally removed to Phelps and resided there till his death. He is buried in the old burying ground at that place.

His farm was on the high road from Southwick village to Westfield, about two miles north from the former. Southwick was originally a part of Westfield, but was detached from the latter. The deacon's descendants are very numerous and among the best representatives of the family at large. Deacon George was chosen a deacon of the Southwick Congregational church when it was organized 17 Aug., 1773, and held that office till his death. He was selectman in 1778-9 and 1788.

He was a private in Captain Austin's company of Suffield minute men, who went to Boston at the Lexington alarm. In January, 1776, he was a sergeant in Captain Harmon's company in Colonel Wolcott's regiment, Connecticut State troops, at Boston, and was present at the occupation of that city by the Americans. He was ensign in 1778, and lieutenant in the Connecticut troops in 1781. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1799, 1800, 1802, 1810, 1811, 1812, 1813, and 1814. In local town matters he also took a commanding position.

s. of Jeremiah: b. 10 Oct., 1747, at Suffield, Ct.; d. at Greenwich, Washington County, N. Y.; m. to Lucy Adams of Suffield. They lived at Suffield, Ct., Salem and Greenwich, N. Y.

He was in Captain Wadsworth's company of Colonel Cook's Connecticut regiment from 26 Aug. to 3 Nov., 1777. He was also with General Gates and present at the surrender of Burgoyne.

1742; d. 6 Feb., 1823, near Rochester, N. Y. They lived at Suffield, Ct., and Halford's Landing, N. Y.

Colonel Zadock Granger lived on the farm of his father, Robert, upon the bank of the Connecticut River opposite the island. He was a farmer, interested in mills, mines, and fisheries. At one time he was the owner of the island and the water power belonging to it. About 1780 he built the house now standing, and which he sold to Thaddeus Granger when he removed to the Genessee country. He was a lieutenant in the second company of the Suffield Train Band in March, 1775, and captain the succeeding May. He was a private in Captain Elihu Kent's company of minute men at the Lexington alarm, and undoubtedly saw other service, though the record cannot be found. His son Eli having removed in 1796 to Halford's Landing, now within the present limits of Rochester, N. Y., the colonel followed him in 1798 and became interested as a merchant and ship-owner at that point. He died of the fever prevalent there in 1799.

s. of Abraham; b. 10 Nov., 1752, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 24 Oct., 1830, at Granville, Mass.; m. 25 Nov., 1779, to Belinda, dau. of Graves Loomis (b. Nov., 1727; d. 18 Jan., 1780) and Elizabeth Smith (b. 10 Nov., 1726; d. 31 Oct., 1803; m. 10 May, 1747) of Suffield. She b. 24 June, 1752; d. 27 July, 1820. They lived at Granville, Mass., and Suffield, Ct.

Mr. Granger was born upon the old place at the north end of the town which was set off to his grandfather Abraham, the son of Launcelot. His father was the famous Captain Abraham, so long a leading citizen of Suffield. His wife was a daughter of 'Squire Loomis, a merchant of Suffield in the West India trade, the vessels bringing their cargoes up the Connecticut River to the head of navigation, just below Suffield. Abraham was a private in Captain Elihu Kent's company of minute men in the Lexington alarm, but no further record of military service can be found. About 1785 he moved on to the mountains in Granville, Mass., where he took up a farm and lived until the time of his death.

SIMEON GRANGER,

s. of Simeon; b. 17 March, 1770, at West Springfield, Mass.; d. 9 Nov., 1834, at Pittsford, Vt; m. 1791, to Phœbe Couch of Sandisfield, Mass. She b. 17 Sept., 1774; d. 6 Feb., 1840.

Simeon Granger, Jr., resided at Sandisfield, Mass., until 1801, when he removed to Salisbury, Ct., remaining there until 1826, in which year he removed to Pittsford, Vt. (to that portion of the town called Grangerville, situated two miles from the village), purchasing from Andrew Leach the furnace property for manufacturing pig iron and stoves, commencing business under the firm name of Simeon Granger & Sons—Lyman and Chester. This was the second blast furnace in the New England States, being built in 1791. The first was built in Berkshire County, Mass., in 1776. Mr. Granger was a man of great energy and self reliance. The following incident was characteristic of him:

It was reported in Salisbury one November day that the Pittsford property was for sale. He waited until dark, so as not to be missed, and then started with his horse and sleigh, driving day and night until he reached Pittsford. He purchased the property, and on his way to the town clerk's office to have the deeds recorded he met a neighbor who had started the following morning, and, holding up the deeds, remarked, "You are too late, neighbor; the property is mine."

He died 19 Nov., 1834, after a successful business career, at the age of 64, leaving a large family and many sincere friends to mourn his death.

Lyman Granger, A. M. (above), was graduated from Union College in 1820, and entered at once upon the study of law at Litchfield Law School and closed it with Judge Samuel Church of Salisbury, Ct. He commenced the practice of law in company with Moses Strong, Esq., of Rutland, Vt., in 1823. He continued in practice until the formation of the firm of Simeon Granger & Sons in the adjoining town of Pittsford until 1837, when, on account of ill health, he sold out his interest in the property. He had several offices of trust, and was representative to the General Assembly of the State in 1826 and 1827. He died suddenly at Utica, N. Y., while on a visit, June 8, 1839, leaving no children.

ERASTUS GRANGER,

s. of Abner; b. 17 Jan., 1765, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 21 Dec., 1826, at Buffalo, N. Y.; m. (1) at Suffield, 22 Nov., 1795. Mrs.

 and dau. of David Brownson and Jerusha Cooley of Suf-

 1813, at Canandaigua, N. Y. Elizabeth, dau. of Nathaniel Sanborn and Hannah Gould of Canandaigua (she b. at Lyme, Ct.; d. 29 July, 1853, at Buffalo).

Judge Erastus Granger spent his boyhood years at the old homestead granted to his grandfather, Thomas, the son of Launcelot, on Crooked Lane in Suffield. Crooked Lane is the country road which leads off the High Street of Suffield and winds northward to Springfield, Mass., ten miles away. Whether it derived its name from the possible sinuosity of its course, or from some fancied irregular characteristics of the family of that name (Lane) who formerly lived upon it, has been an open question among the inhabitants of that village. It has been more or less of a byword in the community, and young Erastus was sometimes facetiously called "the president of Crooked Lane."

His youthful days saw his father, Capt. Abner Granger, at the front in the conflict with the British, and absent from his home for nearly seven years during the war of the Revolution, and he joined his father in camp with the Continental Army and spent a part at least of the winter of 1777-8 in the wretched quarters at Valley Forge.

About the year 1790 he was teaching school at West Suffield, Ct. In 1793 he associated himself in business as a merchant at Suffield with John Leavitt under the firm name of Leavitt & Granger, and soon after purchased a half interest in the merchandizing firm of Freegrace Leavitt & Co. at Hartford, Vt. He continued to operate these two stores till 1798. In those days it was quite common for people to order goods from the "store" in writing, and these orders are still preserved. They give a curious insight into the character of the goods mostly used. Liquors seem to have had the leading place in the wants of the people, one old lady ordering a quarter of a pound of tea and a gallon of rum, another two gallons of rum and five pounds of sugar, while another sends for a candle and a gallon of brandy.

In 1798 he left Suffield for Virginia to take charge of the business there of various New England gentlemen who had invested largely in the wild lands of that State and Kentucky. This occupied him for nearly six years and kept him constantly absent from the Connecticut home. He journeyed from Richmond in the East to Louisville (Ky.) in the West; from Knoxville (Tenn.) in the South to Philadelphia, then the seat of the Federal government.

It was during these extensive trips in Virginia that he first became personally acquainted with Thomas Jefferson and the men associated with him in his political schemes. Judge Granger was early converted to the Jeffersonian views of public and domestic affairs, and upon his return to Suffield labored successfully with his cousin, Gideon Granger, to bring him to the same faith. Connecticut was a strong Federal State, and the two young Grangers were the most prominent adherents of Jefferson then resident within its borders. In the bitter presidential fight of 1800 they stumped the State for Jefferson and later received their reward, Gideon going to Washington as postmaster-general and Erastus to Buffalo as Indian agent for the Six Nations and the promise of every other Federal office at the western end of that State. He was offered the position in November, 1803, was commissioned 30 Jan., 1804, and resigned 1 April, 1818. He was the last full agent appointed to the Nations, while Sir William Johnson was the first.

But Judge Granger brought with him an unwritten commission of greater importance than the others. Aaron Burr, then vice-president of the United States, was deep in his schemes for advancing his interests and a crafty and bitter opponent of his late rival for the presidency, Thomas Jefferson. The capture of New York, Burr's native State, was being attempted by him, and in 1803 Judge Granger had been sent on from the "Seat of Government," as Washington was then always called, by Jefferson to advise DeWitt Clinton of the just-discovered plans and to arrange to thwart them.

He came to Buffalo in 1804 the duly-accredited representative of the government in all political matters, and to his charge was given the management of all national politics in western New York. The Six Nations occupied a position at the beginning of the century of dangerous importance in the eyes of government. In the days of their greatest prosperity their sway was acknowledged by the red men from the sands of the Carolinas to the frozen lakes of Canada; from the gentle Mohawk River in the East to the muddy waters of the Missouri in the West. They were valiant in war and subtle and wise in politics; they were the match of the white men in eloquence and their equals in diplomatic controversy. As early as 1789 the government had found it necessary to locate an agent of exceptional ability near them, and Gen. Israel Chapin of Massachusetts had been appointed. He, with his son, occupied the position till 1802. There was constant danger of an uprising—constant fear at Washington of a repetition of the bloody scenes of Wyoming and of Cherry Valley.

Judge Granger reached Buffalo Creek, traveling on horseback, on 30 March, 1804, to find it a village of sixteen huts, its streets filled with stumps and its inhabitants the usual class found in a frontier town. It had not even a post-office; but as part of the agreement he had made with the government was that a post-office should be located there, he was soon (3 Sept., 1804) commissioned "postmaster at Buffaloe Creek." He resigned this office 6 May, 1818. On 9 Dec., 1803, before leaving Washington, he was confirmed by the United States Senate as surveyor of the port of Buffalo Creek, and on 20 Dec., 1805, confirmed as collector of the port. These last two offices he resigned 17 March, 1812. The duties of the three offices he performed by deputy.

In 1807 he was appointed one of the judges of the county of Genesee, then comprising all the territory between the Genesee River and Lake Erie; and when the western part was set off in 1808 as Niagara County he was appointed judge of that new county. He presided at the first term of court ever held in Buffalo (June, 1808), and continued on the bench until 1817. In 1816 and 1817 he was supervisor of Buffalo, then the highest town office. He was one of the founders of St. Paul's (Episcopal) Church, and its first senior warden.

It was as Indian agent, however, that his principal work was done. The half dozen years preceding the war of 1812 were full of alarms and suspicions of danger. Judge Granger's dispatches from Washington urged the utmost diligence on his part. British agents were constantly crossing from Canada, seeking to stir up the Six Nations and form treaties with them enlisting their aid when war should come. Council after council was held at Buffalo, at which the subtle yet eloquent speech of Red Jacket, Cornplanter, Farmer's Brother, and other silver-tongued orators was heard. News of the declaration of war reached Buffalo on 27 June, 1812, and the question of what the Indians would do was not settled. Judge Granger called a final council at Buffalo, and the chieftains met their agent on 6 July, 1812. The Senecas, the Onondagas, the Cayugas, the Tuscaroras, and the Oneidas were there; only the Mohawks, who at the close of the Revolution had fled to Canada, were absent. The council lasted several days, and Red Jacket and other gifted orators of the Senecas spoke for the Indians. But the influence of the agent prevailed over the hot heads among the Indians, and a treaty was made which bound the dusky men to neutrality during the war.

The importance of this treaty can hardly be overestimated. It closed the door to all danger of the Six Nations becoming the allies of the British and saved the whole frontier, even then sparsely settled, from the horrors of Indian warfare. Had these leaders of the Indians taken up the hatchet hardly a tribe but would have followed suit, and the worst results would have been forthcoming. As it was, the Nations remained neutral, until by good fortune some of the Canadian Indians crossed the Niagara and invaded the Senecas' country, when at once the Nations sprang to arms and voluntarily joined the Americans.

As soon as the Indians joined openly the side of the Americans Judge Granger dropped the sober duties of civil life and went to the front with his Indian wards. He accompanied them into Canada, where they went as the companions of the white soldiers, and shared with them the privations of the campaign. That he might have a position with the troops, he was commissioned a lieutenant-colonel of New York volunteers. Naturally, from his official connection with the government, he was one of the most prominent men in western New York at that time, and a price was actually set on his head by the enemy. His house, removed some three miles from the village, was guarded by his faithful Indians, who also stationed scouts along the banks of the Niagara River, thus enabling him to have earlier warning of any movement of the enemy than the commanding general himself.

On the evening of 10 July, 1813, Judge Granger received word from his faithful scouts that the British had crossed the river and were preparing to attack Buffalo. He also found that his house was especially marked for destruction. He sent messengers to the old chief Farmer's Brother, who was in his hut at the Indian village across the Buffalo Creek, summoning him and such Indians as could be mustered to report to the agent's house. The chief and his followers arrived at 11 o'clock, and the night was spent in preparing for the coming fray. Bullets were molded by the great fire in the kitchen, messengers hurried into the neighboring village for arms and ammunition, and the Indians were banqueted on unlimited salt pork prepared by Mrs. Granger's own hands. As the sun came up in the morning the judge ordered his famous sorrel mare brought out and saddled, and led his red warriors, headed by their chief, then 90 years old, through the woods by what was known as the Guide Board Road (now North Street) to the little town of Black Rock. Just beyond the present site of the Niagara hotel in that city he found the white troops hastily assembling under Gen. Porter, who quickly formed his line with the Indians under Judge Granger on the right, the regulars in the center, and the white volunteers on the left. At once the Indians prepared for battle. This was a simple operation, and consisted in divesting themselves of all clothing save their breechcloths and hanging about their necks the maturnip, a long cord with which they bound their prisoners. Gen. Porter decided to assume the offensive, and at the command the Indians sprang forward with a yell which startled both foe and friend alike. The volunteers on the left commenced to press forward also, but the American center, through some misunderstanding, remained stationary. In a few minutes the two wings had the British force in full and disordered retreat toward their boats on the shore, their commander mortally wounded, and many slain. The Indians followed the retreating enemy, even rushing into the water and pulling them from their boats into the stream. The victory was complete. Buffalo was saved, and saved mainly by the Indians.

In the succeeding December Buffalo was burned, and although nearly every house was destroyed the British failed to get within a mile of Flint Hill, as Judge Granger's place was called.

After the resignation of his various offices Judge Granger withdrew to his homestead in the outskirts of Buffalo, but now well within the city, where he lived quietly until he died. This homestead was a charming spot of nearly 800 acres, covered in part by a noble grove and watered by a babbling brook or creek. On his place he had numerous houses, in which lived others of his family and the people employed by him. The present lovely Forest Lawn Cemetery, the Park, and the State Insane Asylum grounds were once a part of this large estate. He died 21 Jan., 1826.

At his funeral, just before the body was to be carried to the private burying-ground hard by, the door opened and Red Jacket, his friend of many years, strode in. Taking his place at the head of the coffin this gifted son of the forest delivered in the Seneca tongue a last and fitting eulogy to the memory of his former agent. Those who heard and understood it, said it was worthy of the most beautiful speech of the equally-gifted Logan.

Judge Forward was one of the leading men of Buffalo in the early days of the city. He removed there from Ohio in 1808, and at once became assistant postmaster and assistant collector under his brother-in-law, Judge Erastus Granger. In 1812 he became collector of the port, in 1814 judge of the court of common pleas of the county, and in 1819 and some subsequent years was State senator from Buffalo. He is best remembered for his efforts in behalf of the harbor of Buffalo. In 1819 he with two other gentlemen pledged their entire property to the building of a breakwater and removal of the bar at the mouth of Buffalo Creek. This they accomplished, though the most eminent engineers of the day pronounced the scheme impossible. The present harbor is a perpetual monument to Judge Forward.

BOAZ GRANGER,

s. of Aaron; b. 19 Sept., 1774, in Connecticut; d. 4 May, 1843, at North Royalton, O.; m. (1) 31 Dec., 1801, to Lucina Gillett of Suffield, Ct. (d. 4 June, 1802, in her thirty-third year), (2) 8 June, 1803, Mrs. Nancy (Hill) Bird of Salem, Mass. She b. July, 1770; d. 3 May, 1840.

Mr. Granger was born on the bank of the Connecticut River in or near Suffield. Here he married one of the Gilletts of Suffield, a family often connected with the Grangers. Following his kinsmen, he removed early to Phelps, N. Y., where he became a farmer. In 1818 he went to the State of Ohio, where he purchased land of Gideon Granger of Canandaigua and spent the summer clearing it. The next year he brought out his family, traveling by ox team through the woods and making the journey in 21 days. He continued to reside on his farm until his death, as above. While a resident of central New York Boaz Granger became an active participant in the war of 1812. Volunteers were often called on for short service upon the Canadian frontier, at Buffalo, and on the St. Lawrence, and Boaz and his brothers several times responded.

His second wife was born at Salem, Mass., and removed to Northampton during the Revolution. There she married James M. Bird and at once settled near Lake Geneva, N. Y. One son (James, Jr.) was born of this marriage. Mr. Bird died 8 June, 1803.

REF. No.

Aug., 1813, at Phelps, N. Y., aged 39), (2) 1 March, 1814.
Mrs. Delana (Trumbull) Swift.

Pierce Granger was born on his father's hillside farm in Turkey Hills parish, town of Simsbury, Ct., about five miles west of Suffield meeting-house. That part of Simsbury has since been erected into a separate town called East Granby. His baptismal name was that of his mother's family. When 20 years old he started with his brothers Elisha and Elihu on their journey into the wilderness of central New York, described hereafter (see Elihu). Mr. Granger took up land a little east of the present village of Phelps. The spot is now called Unionville. Here is still standing, though in a greatly altered condition, his large homestead. Here his children were born, and here he lived until he followed them late in life to the West.

He was an ardent Methodist, and, with his brother Elihu, founded the church in Phelps. It is said that he was converted by Elder Dow in Connecticut, and was by him licensed to preach, but, whether this be true or not, he was from the beginning of his residence in Phelps a traveling preacher in the church of his choice. Long before any meeting-house was built in that town services were held under his roof, and at his hospitable table all itinerant preachers were sure to be made welcome.

An unhappy controversy with his brother Elihu, growing out of the fact that the latter was engaged in distilling, supplemented by Elihu's quarrel with the church, caused Pierce to cast his eyes toward Ohio, where some of his children had gone, and thither he went in his old age to find a final resting place under the trees of Maxfield.

	Maj. Elihu Granger was born in Turkey Hills parish, then in the town of Simsbury, Ct., but now in East Granby. Here his grandfather, "old John Granger," as he is called in the church records, had spent the last years of his life, and here his father, Elisha, had married the first two of his three wives. Here all his children had been born—the children of a farmer on the eastern slope of what is known as the "mountain." Turkey Hills is a long country road stretching for a mile or more along the foot of the mountain, lined with farm houses and terminating at its southern end in a cluster of buildings (church, schoolhouse, store, etc.) forming the present village of East Granby.

In the half dozen years prior to 1790 the country had been excited by various land speculations, and the desire to "go West" was born. Oliver Phelps of Suffield, a neighbor of the Grangers, had become interested in the purchase of that vast tract of land of which Canandaigua, N. Y., was the center, and known as the Phelps & Gorman purchase. Naturally the townsmen of Mr. Phelps became interested in that fair land, whose charms had first been spread and sung by the soldiers returning from the expedition of Gen. Sullivan in 1779. Hundreds of emigrants went out from Suffield and vicinity to the Genesee country and New Connecticut (northern Ohio) in the last decade of the eighteenth century. Gideon Granger, writing in the year 1798 to his cousin, Judge Erastus Granger, says that "probably 500 people have left this vicinity (Suffield) this season for New Connecticut."

In the early spring of 1789 a party of four young men pushed out into the wilderness of central New York. They were Elihu Granger, aged 18; his brother Pierce, aged 20; Nathaniel Sanborn, a young married man from Lyme, Ct.; and Sanborn's brother-in-law, Mr. Gould. Possibly Elihu's father, Elisha, accompanied the party, but of this fact some doubt has been expressed. They pushed up the Mohawk River in a canoe, made the four-mile portage to the head of Wood Creek, thence through Oneida Lake and by Montezuma up the Canandaigua outlet to a point just below Vienna, now Phelps, where they landed May 19, 1789, being five days behind John Decker Robinson, the first settler.

The summer was spent in clearing land and building rude log huts for their future occupancy. Sanborn and Gould returned East during the summer, accompanied possibly by Elisha, but Pierce and Elihu remained until winter. They then returned on foot through the woods by compass, blazing the trees as they went. They came out on the Mohawk at Whitestown, near Utica. Hurrying back to Turkey Hills, they returned to the wilderness before the snow had left the ground with their families and a few household goods on a covered sleigh. Elihu had married his cousin Apema, daughter of Aaron Granger, and she with her babe Herman accompanied the party. One extra man, one horse, two cows, and a hive of bees completed the party, which camped out several nights in the woods, often fighting with firebrands the wolves which howled about the little camp. Elisha the father removed permanently to Phelps in 1797.

Elihu at once purchased largely of lands in central New York. He is said to have bought in Phelps a tract a mile square, and another in Wayne County. He was, like his brother Pierce, an ardent Methodist, and at first a generous supporter of that church in Phelps. But about 1820 he commenced to distil "strong liquors," which caused much adverse criticism among the brethren in the faith. It is said that he came to the love feast one rainy quarterly meeting Sunday just after the doorkeeper had taken his place, and was refused admission. This angered his heart, already cold, and he withdrew from the church. He quarreled with the church and his brother Pierce. Soon after came financial loss and ruin, and most of his property was swept away. It is pleasant to learn that before his death he became reconciled to his church and regretted the breach which had at one time existed.

Elihu Granger was an officer in the war of 1812. In 1814 he was major in one of the regiments which hastened to the frontier at Buffalo, and after the bloody battle at Chippewa on the Niagara River in Canada he accompanied Gen. Scott to Lundy's Lane and participated in that memorable and desperate defense against the British attack, which ended in the complete repulse of the enemy.

Maj. Granger was a strong man, and the most prominent one of his day at Phelps. He was a farmer and owned several mills, was a lumberman, and held several county offices. He was large and unwieldy in figure, and had a chair of goodly proportions built especially for his use. He died at Phelps 16 July, 1842, and was buried in the graveyard there near the church.

Lorenzo Noble Granger was born at Salina, N. Y. In 1815 he was taken with his mother to her old home at North Hadley, Mass., which town he ever after made his home. He became a favorite with his uncle John Smith, and as soon as Noble attained his majority he was given a half interest in the grist and saw mills at Hadley, to which he gave his undivided attention. His success as a business man was so great that when his uncle died in 1843 Noble purchased his interest in the mills, together with his farm and the ancestral home of the family. As a farmer his success was as great as in the other matters, and his farm was the largest and finest in Hadley. He gave much of his time to the erection of buildings, and many of the largest and finest in Hampshire County were built by him. In all his business life he never had an associate save his uncle, and it can be truly said that he undertook no business in which he did not succeed. That he amassed a large estate is a matter of course. He was distinguished for his integrity and generosity. He gave most liberally to every good cause. To the church in his village, although not a member, he contributed for many years one-fourth of its income. He cared nothing for public life, but declined many honorable positions which were offered him. He was a trustee of Hopkins Academy at Hadley, and represented his district in the Legislature for one term in 1852.

GAHAZI GRANGER,

s. of Samuel ye 3d; b. 10 March, 1775, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 18 Oct., 1869, at Manchester, N. Y.; m. (1) 20 Dec., 1798, to Bathsheba Nelson of West Suffield, Ct., (2) Mrs. Sally Douglas of Brandon, Vt.

Gahazi Granger was a farmer by occupation. He took an active part in the bitter political campaign of 1800, and was present at a political meeting where a serious riot took place. Fearing some unpleasant results from the fracas, four of the young men hurried home and were married that night to the girls of their choice. They then started West the same night to seek new homes. One of these was Gahazi. He first settled in the little town of Penfield, Monroe County, N. Y., where he was engaged in a flour mill. Thence he removed to Littleville, Ontario County, where some of his children were born, and then purchased a farm near Clifton Springs (Manchester town), where still reside some of his descendants. This farm he cleared, and here he lived and died.

He married (1) at West Suffield the night of his sudden departure Bathsheba Nelson of West Suffield, and (2) Mrs. Sally Douglas, widow of Dr. Douglas of Brandon, Vt. She was the mother of the Hon. Stephen A. Douglas and of Mrs. Julius N. Granger, the son of Gahazi.

Julius Granger, the oldest son of Gideon, Sr., was for many years a farmer in Suffield. Upon the death of his father in 1800 Julius and Gideon, Jr., amicably divided the property, Julius taking the farm in the west part of Suffield, while Gideon received the house in the village. Soon after this division, however, Julius decided to move to the settlements in New Connecticut, where so many of his neighbors had gone and where his brother was largely interested in land. Aurora was a point where Gideon had bought largely in Ohio, and to this point Julius went. Here he took up a farm and spent the balance of his life. He devoted himself principally to the raising and selling of live stock. Here he died, and here his descendants live to-day, engaged in the same business as their ancestor.

GIDEON GRANGER,

s. of Gideon; b. 19 July, 1767, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 21 Dec., 1822, at Canandaigua, N. Y.; m. 14 Jan., 1790, to Mindwell, dan. of Joseph Pease and Mindwell King of Suffield. She b. 31 Aug., 1770; d. 17 April, 1860.

In 1767 'Squire Gideon Granger, as he was called, lived on his farm in the western part of Suffield. His wife, Tryphosa, had in her veins the blood of Samuel Kent, who, removing from Gloucester, Mass., became a proprietor of Suffield in 1678, and of the Rev. Benjamin Ruggles, the first settled minister of Suffield, Benjamin Kent, the grandson of Samuel, having married Aphia, the daughter of Mr. Ruggles, and their daughter Tryphosa becoming Mrs. Granger. From this marriage came two children—Julius and Gideon, called "Gid." Granger in his native town to distinguish him from his father. 'Squire Granger later removed to the village, and here young Gideon lived until his removal to Washington. His house is now standing back of the buildings of the Connecticut Literary Institute on High Street.

Young Gideon was prepared for college by the Rev. Mr. Gay, the minister of Suffield, himself a graduate of Harvard, and took his diploma at Yale with the class of 1787. He then studied law and took up the practice of his profession on Suffield Hill, his office being next to his father's village house. In those days the leading members of the bar were often found in the country towns, and young Gideon had in his own village legal brethren worthy of his steel. But, like all the brighter men of his day in that part of the country, he invested in wild lands in Virginia, Kentucky, and Ohio, the latter only giving him returns for his investments. He at one time owned the major portion of the land on which now stands the city of Cleveland, O., and his other holdings in that State amounted to thousands of acres.

Young Gideon was a natural politician. Instinctively he turned to the local political field, though with his growing ambition his eyes looked for higher laurels than the votes of his native town could give. He entered the Connecticut Legislature in 1792, when 25 years of age, and was reëlected each year till his removal to Washington. He became at once a leader in the lower branch, and made an enduring name and fame for himself in drafting and passing the common school law of Connecticut. At first he was in politics a Federalist, but during the last decade of the century he was induced to espouse the cause of Jefferson. This did not prevent, however, his reëlection to the Legislature, where he had distinguished himself, though there he found himself in a hopeless minority. Once, as a candidate for Speaker of the House, he was bitterly opposed and overwhelmingly defeated.

The bitter presidential contest of 1800 brought Mr. Granger the opportunity he sought. Together with his cousin and colaborer he actively canvassed Connecticut in the cause of Jefferson and Democracy as represented by him. The two Grangers were the most important workers for that party in all New England, then intensely Federal. Naturally the action of the two young men attracted attention at the seat of government, and when Gideon visited Washington after the election of Mr. Jefferson he received a reception such as was rarely given to a stranger. Upon the floor of the House, where he was introduced, he became the observed of all observers. He was then barely 33 years old. During the summer of 1801 President Jefferson offered him the position of postmaster-general of the United States. There was some hesitancy about accepting the honor, and various letters passed between the president and his young friend. Finally the following letter was dispatched, and the offer was accepted:

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31, 1801.

DEAR SIR:

Your favors of the 25th and 26th insts. came to hand last night. I feel with great sensibility the domestic obstacles which embarrass your mind on the subject of a removal to this place; but nobody knows better, because no one has encountered more steadfastly the formidable phalanx opposed to the republican features of our constitution. To bear up against this the talents and virtue of our country must be formed into phalanx also. My wish is to collect in a mass around the administration all the abilities and the respectability to which the offices exercised here can give employ—to give none of them to secondary characters. Good principles wisely and honestly administered cannot fail to attach our fellow citizens to the order of things which we espouse. Under this view of the circumstances in which we are placed we cannot dispense here with your aid. Besides the preference which the general objects claim over those merely local, I cannot but believe that the reedification of public opinion, even in Connecticut, could be more promoted by you from here by disseminating correct information than by your action there. You ask whether it would be necessary for you to come on immediately. The sooner the better, certainly, because Col Habersham retires, I believe, this day. How far the principal dignitary (a rank Federalist of your State) can conduct the business by himself I know not, but I should think it better for you to come as soon as possible, qualify, and possess yourself of the office, and, having obtained a sufficient view of its business to judge how long you could be spared from it, return then for a while to make your ultimate arrangements at home. It is now five weeks to the meeting of Congress; it will occur to you as very desirable that you should be finally fixed here before their meeting. If you find it better to make your final arrangements before you come be so good as to inform me. Accept assurances of my constant esteem and respect.

TH. JEFFERSON.

Gideon Granger, Esq.

Soon after accepting office Mr. Granger removed his family to Washington, and there continued to reside till he left government employ. He continued as postmaster-general during the two terms of Jefferson and during part of that of Madison. He had his enemies as well as friends, and in 1806 the House of Representatives passed resolutions to "investigate" his office and his conduct. The charges arose with some of his Connecticut neighbors, but were squarely met and fully refuted. When the war of 1812 approached the Democratic party found itself so strong that, for want of a political enemy to combat, it fought among its own members. Mr. Granger favored the hopes and schemes of DeWitt Clinton, who was his warm personal friend, though he did not openly espouse his cause when Clinton was a candidate for the presidency. But after the election Mr. Granger issued a pamphlet which met with disapproval from Madison and his friends, and it resulted in his withdrawing from the office he had held for 13 years. He was appointed to office 28 Nov., 1801; resigned 17 March, 1814.

Gideon Granger then removed with his family to Whitestown (now Whitesboro), N. Y., intending to make that his home, but business connected with the lands of Phelps & Gorman at and about Canandaigua called him there, and he finally decided to remove thence from Whitestown. He had long before visited the flourishing hamlet of Canandaigua as the representative of Massachusetts to recover from Mr. Phelps for the State a large sum still due for the lands which Phelps & Gorman had purchased, and again he found himself assisting to disentangle the knot into which the land matters there had gotten. He commenced in 1816 to build the large house which still stands on the main street of Canandaigua, and when it was completed in 1817 he removed there and made it his permanent home.

Although in poor health, Mr. Granger took at once a position in the politics of the State of his adoption and in the great scheme of his friend Clinton for a canal across New York. By word and by pen Mr. Granger assisted the promoters of the Erie Canal, and in 1821 was elected to the State Senate that he might give it further aid. He did not live to see it completed, or even pass beyond the reach of ridicule. He had been for many years an invalid, suffering constantly while in Washington from gout, and soon after returning from Albany this disease attacked him in the stomach with such severity that he succumbed, dying 31 Dec., 1822, in the fifty-fifth year of his age. He was buried in the graveyard at Canandaigua, where now lie about him many generations of the family to which he belonged.

Ralph Granger (above) was in business at Del Norte, Colr., as a grocer, with one partner. In the summer of 1891 they hired a man to prospect for them in the neighborhood of the mining camp of Creede, near Del Norte, giving him $50 and his provisions. He discovered in a few days the now famous mine called "Last Chance." The prospector and the partner sold out their interests. Mr. Granger retained his third. The mine is now (May, 1892) paying over $3,000 a day net to its owners. Mr. Granger has an infant son, name unknown to the editor.

OLIVER GRANGER,

s. of Oliver; b. 18 Jan., 1777, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 23 Sept., 1850, at Dresden, O.; m. (1) 1802 to Sarah Gay of Saundersville, N. J., (2) 15 Feb., 1818, to Susan, da. of John Conklin of Neversink, Ulster County, N. Y. They lived at Zanesville, O.

About 1801 Oliver Granger went to northern New Jersey and there taught school, and afterward kept a store for several years. He married at Saundersville, Sussex County, Sarah Gay, daughter of a Hessian soldier who had become a citizen of the country he had entered as an enemy. On March 28, 1803, their daughter, Ann Eliza, was born. Soon after her parents separated and she was taken by her father to his father's home in Suffield, where Capt. Oliver's fourth child and second daughter, Mrs. Anna Hathaway, was her loving foster-mother and "taught her the thrifty household ways of the time." She attended the school in the district and two or three terms at Westfield Academy. "She was an excellent singer, a good reader, and a nice writer."

Her mother having died, Oliver married Susan Conklin at New Haven, O., and lived for a time at Lower Sandusky (now Fremont), O., where their daughter Caroline was born 18 March, 1819. They returned to Connecticut, and a second child, Alfred Conklin Granger, was born at Wallingford 2 July, 1821. Later in that year he decided to remove again to Ohio, where his brothers owned land in Portage County in the Western Reserve, and wished his eldest daughter to go with him. "Aunt Ann" was much opposed to this, but the father prevailed. On 1 November, 1821, with team, wagon, wife, and three children, he left Suffield in Connecticut and arrived at Martin Kent's in Suffield, O., on the first day of December. In the following spring he put up a log house there and lived in it during that summer. His daughter Ann Eliza taught school near by. In the fall letters from his brothers James and Henry induced him to seek a new home in Zanesville. He there engaged in business more or less connected with his brothers. For a number of years he resided on a farm now within the city, but then about one mile east of the court-house.

INDEX No.

About 1837 he bought and for some years conducted a soap and candle factory in the town. Later he removed to Dresden in the same county (Muskingum), and there died 22 Sept., 1850. His widow survived until 29 Nov., 1871, and died in Putnam, now a part of Zanesville, at the home of her daughter Caroline.

After various business engagements near his home Ebenezer Granger (above) went to New Mexico as clerk to Maj. (afterward Paymaster-General) Brice and so served for a number of years. He then formed a partnership in that Territory and dealt in army supplies. The outbreak of the civil war broke up his business with loss, but left him a competency. He returned to Zanesville and died there.

Pursuant to an act of Congress passed in May, 1796, a road was marked out within "the territory northwest of the Ohio" from Wheeling in Virginia to Limestone (now Maysville) in Kentucky.

INDEX No.

REF. No.

Ebenezer Zane, who was employed to survey and open this roadway, caused it to cross the Muskingum River at the mouth of the Pataskala or Licking, one of its tributaries, because the main stream there formed cascades (falling thirteen feet in one mile) and promised water power sufficient for many mills and factories.

Under provisions of the same law Zane received from President John Adams a patent for one square mile of land embracing this crossing. A ferry was established in 1798, and a village named Westbourne was laid out by John McIntire and Jonathan Zane on the east bank of the river in 1799.

In 1801 Gideon Granger, then postmaster-general, was petitioned to establish a post-office there. He did so. As the name Westbourne had been given to another post town in the territory he called the new post-office Zanesville, and soon after the town was so named. Gideon was postmaster-general from 28 Nov., 1801, to 17 March, 1814. About 1810 he made an official journey from Washington to Nashville, Tenn., going through Virginia via Lynchburg and Knoxville, and returning through Kentucky and Ohio.

With him was Ebenezer Granger, who had studied law under him at Washington, and was then expecting to be admitted to the bar and to seek a location for practice. The postmaster-general noted the "natural advantages" of Zane's crossing of the Muskingum, and said to his young relative and student: "Here is the place for you. This town will grow." To this counsel Ebenezer gave heed, and in 1810 made his home in Zanesville.

Ebenezer Granger was an able, well-equipped lawyer, and soon became influential in the growing community. He married Eliza Seaman 31 July, 1815. She was a sister of the half blood to that Henry Stanbery who for many years was one of Ohio's foremost lawyers and closed a career of notable public service as attorney-general of the United States during President Johnson's administration.

Ebenezer Granger was legal adviser to John McIntire, the principal founder of Zanesville, and drafted the last will and testament of that pioneer. This divided the estate equally between the wife and sole daughter, each to hold for life, remainder to her issue. It occurred to McIntire that one or both of them might die childless, so he asked his counsel, "What shall I do about that?" The lawyer said: "There will always be poor people in your town whose children ought to be educated. Why not make your estate support a school for the poor children here in case no descendant of yourself or of Mrs. McIntire survives?" The suggestion was adopted; no descendant survived. The John McIntire Children's Home in Zanesville's tenth ward, the McIntire Academy in the second ward, the free access of more than 450 children to the Zanesville Atheneum Library in the first ward, and the fund expended yearly for books and clothing for needy city school children, are the results of Ebenezer Granger's counsel.

Mr. Granger died 17 Sept., 1822, in the prime of life, leaving one child, Robert Seaman Granger.

1441 i Robert Seaman, b. 1817; m. 1849 Anna E., dau. of Dr. John A. Turner and Harriet Adams; no children. P. O., Zanesville, O.

Bvt. Maj.-Gen. Robert S. Granger, U. S. A., graduated from West Point and entered the service of the United States 1 July, 1838. On the 28th of the same month he joined his regiment, the Second Artillery, at Chattanooga, Tenn. He was afterward transferred to the First Infantry, and was engaged in the Florida war till July, 1841. On 13 Jan., 1847, he left Fort Snelling, Minn., under orders for Mexico, traveled on the ice to Fort Burlington, Ia., and joined his regiment in Mexico 28 March. Here he remained until the close of the war.

When the Rebellion broke out he was stationed in Texas, and, with other officers, was betrayed into the hands of the rebels by Gen. Twiggs. Capt. Granger earnestly opposed the surrender, and recommended the seizure of the vessels in port. The captured officers were paroled with permission to go North and perform duty outside the confederacy. He returned to his native State and assisted in organizing and drilling Sherman's brigade. He was placed in command of the barracks at Cincinnati in December, and was made disbursing officer for the State. He was transferred to Louisville and placed in command of that post. He was exchanged 28 Aug., 1862, and 1 Sept. appointed brigadier-general of State troops by the governor of Kentucky; but this was given up at once, as he was ordered to take command of a division of Federal troops at Shepardsville. His services in Kentucky were specially acknowledged by a report to the War Department. He attacked and defeated a portion of Forrest's cavalry at Lebanon Junction. Being ordered to Lawrenceburg with a brigade of infantry and cavalry, he drove the enemy from that vicinity, and after a short skirmish, 20 Sept., captured 150 men.

He joined Gen. Buell's army at Crab Orchard, and was assigned to command of the Tenth Division. He was appointed brigadier-general for meritorious services in Kentucky, to date from 20 Oct., and on the 31st was ordered to the command at Bowling Green. He joined the Army of the Cumberland at Murfreesboro 10 Jan., 1863, and was assigned to command of the First Division, Fourteenth Army Corps. He was ordered to the command of Nashville in June, and of the district north of the Duck River 5 Sept. Gen. Granger succeeded in clearing his district from guerillas.

On 1 June, 1864, he was assigned to command the District of Northern Alabama. While at Decatur he was constantly engaged with the forces under Roddy and others on the south side of the river, and was uniformly successful. The rebel Gen. Patterson was surprised at Courtland and his entire train and camp captured. In August the forces under Granger skirmished with Wheeler's cavalry. Gen. Granger was in command at Huntsville when the garrison of that place was summoned to surrender by Gen. Forrest. The demand was refused and the enemy withdrawn.

Hood's army invested Decatur 27 Oct., 1864, and on the 28th Gen. Granger attacked and carried the first line of rifle pits. On the same day a battery of eight guns was captured on the right, but the enemy being heavily reinforced, they were spiked and abandoned. The enemy acknowledged a loss of over 1,500 men, while the national loss was but 106. The importance of the defeat of Hood is seen when it is known that Decatur is 110 miles south of Nashville and is connected with that city by a fine turnpike. Had Hood captured Decatur he would have been in Nashville by 4 Nov.

Before the close of the war Gen. Granger was breveted major-general of volunteers, and in 1866 was in command at Richmond, Va. He now lives at Zanesville.

Gen. Granger's official record is as follows:

Appointed cadet to West Point, 1833.

Graduated 1 July, 1838.

Second lieutenant First Infantry, 1 July, 1838.

First lieutenant 14 March, 1839.

Horace C. Granger emigrated to Ohio in early manhood, and was employed for several years in his Uncle James's mill at Moxahala. Then he and a Mr. Dewar, as partners, rented and conducted the mill. About 1844 they bought a steam flour and woolen mill and a farm at New Lexington, Perry County, O., and removed there. After a year or two Horace bought his partner's share and continued business alone until his death. He died 28 Aug., 1872, from an injury received while riding a favorite horse. He never married.

John E. Granger, fourth son of Horace, emigrated to Ohio in his early manhood. For a time he was a partner with his first cousin, Henry O. Granger, and others in a carriage manufactory at Zanesville. After the dissolution of that firm he went to New Lexington and had business relations with his brother Horace. There on 11 March, 1858, he married Evaline, daughter of Adam and Elizabeth Hart. He died childless 13 July, 1863. On 7 May, 1884, she married Jesse Rockhold and now lives at Rehoboth, O.

Patterson (b. Jefferson County, Va.) of Zanesville. She b. 14 Sept., 1804; d. 24 Oct., 1836. They lived at Zanesville.

James Granger arrived at Zanesville from Suffield about 1817, and soon built a flour mill a little north of the east end of the present State (then United States) dam. This was until 1828 the largest dam in the county. His brother Henry followed him to the West and became his partner in the milling business. In August, 1828, the mill was destroyed by fire. On 15 Feb., 1829, James married Matilda Vance Moorhead, whose parentage came from the Chaplines and Catons of Maryland and the Pattersons, Pendletons, Carters, etc., of Virginia. Her father, Moses C. Moorhead, first came to Zanesville, in 1810 the temporary State capital, as representative from Belmont County. His father (Joseph Moorhead, a surveyor and civil engineer) came from Belfast and Dublin, Ireland, before the Revolutionary war and married Louvisa Chapline of Sharpsburg, Md., in 1771.

Before coming to Zanesville James was in business in Baltimore. One of his fellow boarders there was George Peabody, afterward the London banker and philanthropist. They met again when Mr. Peabody in 1866 visited his niece, Mrs. Charles W. Chandler, in Zanesville and compared early recollections. When the English fleet and army were approaching Baltimore in 1814 Judge (Captain) Nicholson's company of Baltimore artillery was added to the garrison of Fort McHenry. On the morning when Francis S. Key, a prisoner on a British war ship in the bay, was writing the "Star Spangled Banner" James Granger, artilleryman, was in an exposed bastion of that fort and was wounded by a fragment of a British shell. The same shell killed Messrs. Clem and Claggett, two other citizen artillerymen. They were partners in business, and were the only killed in the company.

In 1832 James bought of his father-in-law a large tract of land on Moxahala Creek, near Zanesville. On it was a mill. In farming, milling, stock raising, etc., he continued there until his death, 28 May, 1874.

s. of Zadock; b. 12 April, 1763, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 4 May, 1823, at Halford's Landing, N. Y.; m. 13 Nov., 1785, to Jemima, dau. of John Leavitt (b. 16 July, 1724; d. 5 April, 1798) and Abiah Kent (d. 12 June, 1782, aged 55) of Suffield. She b. 24 July, 1765; d. 2 Dec., 1818.

Eli Granger was born on the river bank at Suffield on the farm of his father, Col. Zadock. He spent his early life on the farm, and assisted his father in building the fine house on the place. He married the daughter of a leading merchant of Suffield, the ceremony being performed by his brother-in-law, who was a justice of the peace. In 1796-7 the excitement regarding the lands in the Genesee country ran high in Suffield, and Eli Granger, Thomas King, Simon King, and Elisha Kent started for the promised land in covered sleighs, accompanied by their wives. They settled at what was called Halford's Landing. This is now within the limits of Rochester, N. Y., and just below the lower falls. Lake Ontario is but a few miles away, and the Genesee is navigable from the lake to the landing. Here Eli opened a general store and conducted it for many years. The place was one of the most sickly in the western country, and several of his companions soon died of fever. Col. Zadock joined his son about 1798, but soon died.

In 1797 the entire country from the west bank of the Genesee to Lake Erie was formed into one township, and Eli was made the first town clerk. The records of the meeting show that $50 was voted for town expenses for the ensuing year, and it was decided that "hogs may run at large in the town"—a tract of land inhabited only by Indians, though now containing the cities of Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Batavia, etc., and being some 200 miles long by 70 wide.

In 1799 Eli and Abner Magalls built at Halford's Landing the first sailing vessel ever used on Lake Ontario. This was named the "Jemima," after Mrs. Eli Granger. Mr. Granger spent the balance of his life at what is now Rochester, and died as above.

ELDAD GRANGER,

1579

s. of Jonathan; b. 16 March, 1766, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 2 March, 1866, at Alstead, N. H.; m. 1790 to Sarah, dau. of Thomas Holmes and Hannah Harris of Woodstock, Ct.

She b. 10 Oct., 1771, at Woodstock; d. 25 Oct., 1852, at Westmoreland, N. H.

Eldad Granger in early life removed to Chesterfield, N. H., where he was a mechanic and wheelwright. Later he removed to Westmoreland in the same county, where he built a house and established a saw and grist mill which he carried on until late in life. He was never sick in his life, and his death was due to natural decay. He used tobacco and spirits in moderation the whole of his life. He was spare and slight in figure, and wiry and muscular. He had what is known as a double set of teeth all around, and at his death they were in perfect condition. In politics he was a Whig, in religion a Universalist. He died at the house of Mrs. Hodgkin, his daughter, in Alstead, lacking 14 days of being a centenarian.

Willis of Warren, Me. She b. 28 Feb., 1820; l. 1892. They lived at Pascoag.

The Rev. Abraham H. Granger, D.D., spent the early part of his long life upon his father's farm in Suffield, and in September, 1833, entered the Connecticut Literary Institute at Suffield on its opening term. Here he prepared for college, entering what was then Waterville College (now Colby University), and was graduated in 1839 at the head of his class. In the fall of 1840 he entered the Newton Theological Seminary at Newton, Mass., and after his graduation there was ordained pastor of the Baptist Church at Warren, Me. In 1854 he resigned this charge to accept the pastorate of the Fourth Baptist Church of Providence, R. I. Here he remained 23 years, or until 1 July, 1877. In the spring of 1879 he became pastor of the Baptist Church at Burrillville, R. I., which relation continued until September, 1891. Since his retirement he has devoted his time to the duties of superintendent of schools in Burrillville. Dr. Granger received the degree of doctor of divinity from his alma mater in 1864.

 25 March, 1842, at Bethel, Vt.; m. 21 Sept., 1830, to Cynthia Wells. She b. 31 Dec., 1802; d. 4 May, 1838; buried at Delaware, O. They resided at Bethel, where he was a teacher. He died of consumption at the house of his uncle, Samuel Thompson Granger, in Bethel.

About a year after the marriage of Daniel Granger to Cynthia Wells he removed to Delaware, O., and for several years he taught country schools in different parts of the county. His reputation as a pedagogue is fresh among the older people who were once his scholars. He was a teacher of the old-fashioned kind, and ruled his pupils by physical force. He was not afraid to "tackle" a refractory scholar twice his size. Ex-President Hayes was once his pupil, and tells how the master got into the schoolroom when the boys had locked him out and themselves in by climbing to the roof, and, holding a board over the chimney of the old-fashioned fireplace, smoking out the rebels. When he gained possession of the fort he opened the doors and windows to the cold winter air, and none of the big boys dared object.

so well (he had long been in command of the battery), told us to look out for the battery after he was gone, and to get Lieut. Smith, who had been wounded, off the field if possible. His goodness of heart and equity of government won the manliest affection of all, and as we looked upon that prostrate form for the last time the stoutest of hearts gave way to tears."

Henry Corydon Granger (above) enlisted in Company B, Eleventh Massachusetts volunteers, in 1861, and was mortally wounded at the battle of Williamsburg, Va. He was buried on the field, but his remains now rest in the national cemetery at Yorktown, Va. Col. Brownell Granger writes of him as follows:

"While I was serving as adjutant of the Eleventh Massachusetts volunteers I was called to inspect a new arrival of recruits. To my astonishment I noticed Corry among them. As I had known him at home in my father's office as a sickly boy, I knew he would never endure the life of a soldier; but thinking I could have him discharged at any time, assigned him to a company as clerk with the captain's consent. This was at Budd's Ferry, on the Potomac. When we were assured of embarking for the peninsula I obtained for him a certificate of discharge for disability. This he indignantly refused, saying that when he wished for a discharge he would ask for it himself: so long as he could do his duty he intended to do it. Our first fight after landing was at Williamsburg. Corry's company was deployed as skirmishers, and he was, I think, nearly the first man killed in that battle."

Daniel T. Granger was educated at Bowdoin College in Maine, where he was graduated in the class of 1826. He studied law in the office of Judge Ethan Shipley at Saco, and was admitted to the bar in 1829. After practicing at Newfield, Me., for 4 years he removed in 1833 to Eastport and became a partner of Frederick Hobbs, whose extensive business he assumed charge of in 1837. In 1854 he was appointed a judge on the supreme bench of Maine, but declined the appointment on account of failing health and died the same year.

Mr. Granger was one of the most eminent lawyers who have practiced in Maine. He was noted for his promptness and the thorough manner in which all his cases were prepared for trial. He had a most retentive memory, and better than most of his brethren could instantly call into use the decisions of his own and sister States. He was extremely methodical and precise in his personal habits, and this system he carried into his business and his hours of study and work. As an advocate Mr. Granger was fluent, earnest, and dignified, his weight of character, the candor and sincerity of conviction that shone in his face, carrying deeper impressions to the minds of the jurors than all the elaborate graces of oratory.

Frank DeW. Granger (above) attended the common schools at Eastport, Me., and developed a taste for mathematics. This led him to become attached to the United States Coast Survey, and he has taken part in much of the most important work done by that corps during the last 15 years. In 1880 he was given charge of a party engaged in the survey of the thirty-ninth parallel, the object of which is to determine the figure of the earth. On this work he has since been employed in Missouri and Kansas.

P. O., Saco, Me.

s. of Daniel; b. 13 June, 1812, at Saco, Me.; m. 2 Oct., 1839, to Mary A., dan. of Joshua Eaton (b. 23 Aug., 1781; d. 21 May, 1838) and Mehitabel Bickford (b. 29 March, 1785; d. 4 April, 1852) of Wells, Me. She b. 18 Dec., 1811; d. 2 April, 1889, at Saco.

Charles Henry Granger was early fitted for college, and at the age of 17 was appointed to West Point. He remained there but a short time, being obliged, because of serious trouble with his eyes, to return home. He early developed a taste for the arts and took up the profession of painting, which he made his life's work. After his marriage he lived at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Hagerstown, Md. In 1842 he returned to Saco, and has since made his home there. As a portrait painter he has excelled, and many fine examples of his work are to be found in Maine. Mr. Granger is a man of strict integrity, retiring disposition, and delicate sensibilities. He is essentially a gentleman of the now rare "old school."

JOSEPH GRANGER,

s. of Joseph; b. 25 Sept., 1797, at Salem, Mass.; d. at Calais, Me.; m. (1) 22 May, 1822, to Harriet Jordan, dau. of Daniel Granger and Polly Jordan of Saco, Me. (see No. 757). The Hon. Joseph Granger was one of the best known men of his day in Calais. He had received a fine education, and in early life engaged in commercial pursuits, but he finally studied law, and in 1830 commenced the practice of his profession in Calais. This he actively continued till the day of his death. His ability and industry placed him among the leading lawyers of his State, and the Maine reports attest his busy and successful professional career. He was the Nestor of the bar in his part of the country, and his advice was sought by all his legal brethren. He was also active in public affairs; served several times in both branches of the city government, and was mayor, city solicitor, and county attorney for many terms. In 1861 and '62 he was representative, and in 1865 and '66 was senator in the Legislature. He rejoiced that he had two sons to send to assist the government at the time of the Rebellion, and regretted that he was himself too old to accompany them. Mr. Granger was twice married, each time to a daughter of his uncle, Daniel Granger.

Gen. George Frederic Granger (above) was born at Calais, Me., and was educated at Bowdoin College. In 1861 he enlisted in Company A, Ninth Maine volunteer infantry, and was appointed first lieutenant and then captain. He was promoted to be major in July, 1863.

REF. No.

He received a ball in the knee at Drewry's Bluff. Soon after leaving the hospital, he was commissioned as colonel, and after commanding his regiment during a number of engagements, he was given a command of a brigade, and served in various localities. He was finally placed in command at Raleigh, N. C. In June, 1865, he was appointed brigadier-general by brevet. After the close of the war he entered the law office of his father at Calais, and was one of the well-known firm of J. & G. F. Granger; but he never entered actively into the practice of the law, but devoted most of his time to his father's large real estate interests. His health prevented his active participation in public and political matters, but he was a member of the city government of his native city.

 P. O., Paw Paw, Mich., 786

s. of Elihu, b. 11 Jan., 1808, in Sandisfield, Mass.; m. 13 Sept., 1832, Julia Ann Hubbard. She d. 2 Sept., 1879. They lived in Paw Paw.

Gen. Thomas A. Granger spent the earlier part of his life in New York State. At the age of 18 he became a member of the State militia, and rose till he was elected colonel of the Seventy-sixth regiment. At the time of the "Patriot War," in New York, he took his regiment to the St. Lawrence River, and did service there. Later he was elected brigadier-general, and commanded the fifty-fifth brigade for over four years. Since removing to Michigan, General Granger has taken a prominent part in the temperance question and agitation, having been the candidate for lieutenant-governor of Michigan upon the prohibition ticket. He is at present a merchant in Paw Paw, Mich.

John Hulet was a soldier in the Revolution, and was at Bunker Hill. The Hulet family came from Lee, Mass., and removed to Brunswick, Medina County, O., after the marriage of Fletcher; here they lived 19 years until their further removal to Berea, O., where they both died.

Speaking of Fletcher Hulet's marriage, a writer says: "When he had acquired a farm of his own at Brunswick, O., he proposed marriage to Miss Fanny Granger, of Pittsfield, who had come out to Brunswick to visit her sister, Mrs. Dr. Somers. The circumstances of their marriage were pithily told in an extended memorial to Mr. Hulet, published after his death in 1882. 'Fletcher Hulet never had an hour to spare, nor a day to visit, from the earliest record to the day of his death; never went fishing, or cooning, or gunning, unless he went for meat; and so, true to his traditions, when he made up his mind to go East for his promised bride, he found so many last things to be done, before leaving, so much more to be finished before winter, that instead of leaving in September, as he had planned, it was only when the danger of the lake's closing at Buffalo became imminent that he broke away and made all speed for Berkshire. There he remembered to his dismay that three weeks of publishing the bans must go before a legal marriage could be solemnized. No three weeks could he wait unless he made up his mind to stay all the winter, and so he makes up a party consisting of the bride, her sister and husband (Mr. and Mrs. Jason Langdon), and they came on together over the New York line, where no law of publishing the bans stood in their way, and were married on the 16th day of December, 1829, by Rev. A. H. Dumont, in Schodack, N. Y. The first article purchased by the young husband, after they reached their new home, was an arithmetic, then a slate, and the sturdy, self-reliant man of 26 sat down at the feet of his better educated wife to learn arithmetic. Late into the night, after hard days' work, he studied, and soon outstripped his teacher. Then he boarded the teacher of the district, taking as full compensation for the same an evening hour of assistance on his books; for arithmetic was no sooner finished than algebra was attacked, then geometry and astronomy, mechanics and history. What he touched he never laid down until he had absorbed it all."

Col. Orrin Granger was an officer in the war of 1812, and taken prisoner at Detroit. Later he commanded at Zanesville, O., and afterwards was stationed at Chillicothe and Cincinnati. He was mustered out 15 June, 1815. He returned to Granville, O., where he kept a public house. He was but 33 years old when he died, and was buried with military and masonic honors; his was the largest funeral ever known in that part of the country — people coming from Cincinnati, Columbus, Zanesville, etc., to do honor to his memory. It was a saying that he was the handsomest and most popular young man in the State. His widow afterwards married Henry Jewett, and lived at Reynoldsburg, Ohio.

Chester Granger resided at Sandisfield, Mass., until 1801, when his father removed to Salisbury, Ct., where his youth and early manhood were spent. At the age of 29 he became a member of the firm of Simeon Granger & Sons, removing to Pittsford, Vt., at that time. Mr. Granger was one of the projectors and original directors in the Rutland & Burlington Railroad, and for many years director in the Bank of Rutland. After the death of his father his portion of the furnace property was purchased from the heirs by Chester and his brother, Edward L., and conducted under the firm name of C. & E. L. Granger, until 1846, when, at the death of the younger member of the firm, it was again changed to Granger, Hodges & Co. Later on it was incorporated under the name of Pittsford Iron Co. He represented the town in the General Assembly in 1860 and 1861, besides holding other offices of trust. From 1862 to 1865 Mr. Granger was engaged in the iron business in Pennsylvania, after which he retired to Pittsford, where he enjoyed the fruits of his industrious life, dying in his 81st year. He was a man of energy, public spirit, and sterling integrity, and many a poor person can testify as to his private charity and moral worth. One son survived him.

Lyman Couch Granger, M.D., (above) received his education at Salem, N. Y., Burr Seminary, Manchester, Vt., and Norwich University, Norwich, Vt. He studied medicine with Dr. Theodore Woodward of Castleton, Vt., and graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York city. He inherited from his mother a tendency towards consumption, which necessitated his traveling to build up his health, and for several years he held the position of surgeon on a line of vessels running between New York and Liverpool.

Soon after the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion he received the appointment of assistant surgeon in the navy. From exposure, wounds, and fatigue, the weakness of his lungs increased, and in July, 1864, he was granted a furlough, only to die September 26, at the age of 32. His great regret was that he could not live to see the war ended. He was a person of warm heart, kind impulses, reserved in manner, making only a few friends, but those true ones.

killed in Sheridan's charge at the battle of Winchester, Va.

Edward Myron Granger (above) received his education at Pittsford and at Norwich University, Norwich, Vt., leaving there in 1861 at the age of 16 to enter the Harris Light Cavalry of New York, as orderly sergeant, in the war of the Rebellion. He was captured once and exchanged; was in several engagements unharmed, until the morning of Sheridan's raid, while charging through Winchester, 19 Sept., 1864, was shot through the body and died the same afternoon. As he was being brought from the field in an ambulance, he met the Vermont brigade going into action, and recognizing the surgeon, Dr. Willard Childe, called to him, who detailed several members from his native town to take him in charge. Edward requested Dr. Childe not to inform his mother of his wound until he had recovered; and when he was informed that he could not live, he replied, "poor mother," and soon passed into an unconscious state. His body was afterwards removed and placed besides his father's, in the family tomb in Pittsford, Vt.

She b. 7 Oct., 1816; d. 31 Jan., 1887, at Providence.

Mrs. Davis was a daughter of Gen. Daniel Larned of Pomfret, Ct., an officer in the Revolutionary war.

The Rev. James N. Granger, D.D., was born at Canandaigua, N. Y., in the summer of 1814. His father's house in Buffalo had been especially marked by the British for destruction; and in the preceding winter, on the day that the village was burned, the family had been hurriedly sent to a safer retreat in Canandaigua. At the close of the war, they returned to Buffalo, and here and at the flourishing Canandaigua academy the boy received his primary education. In 1828, after the death of his father, young James received an appointment to the United States Military Academy at West Point; but before the time came to enter upon his studies there, he decided to become a "soldier of the Cross" instead. With this end in view, he entered the Hamilton Literary and Theological Institute (later Madison University, and now Colgate University) at Hamilton, N. Y., in 1834, and was graduated from the Collegiate department in August, 1836, and the Theological School, in August, 1838. He was settled over the Baptist church at Avon, N. Y., till 1840, when he removed to Buffalo to become the pastor of the church there.

In the month of October, 1842, while yet but a young man of 28, he removed to Providence, R. I., to become the pastor of the First Baptist Church in that city. It was the church of Roger Williams, and of which he was the first pastor; it was the University church, and among its parishioners sat the famous Dr. Francis Wayland, the president and faculty of Brown University, and other widely-known teachers and scholars. It was a position which demanded much from anyone, and more than most men of 28 could give. It gave him a standing of importance in the State, both in the world outside the sacred walls, as well as amongst the clergy and the churches. He was for many years president of the Rhode Island Baptist State Convention, president of the Rhode Island State Sunday-school Union, member of the board of the Newton (Mass.) Theological Institution, trustee and fellow of Brown University, and finally a member of the executive board of that venerable institution.

The study of foreign missions had ever been his especial delight, and his knowledge of them was equaled by few. And thus it came that, when the missionary board were about to send a committee of two to Burmah to investigate and decide upon the most momentous questions which had ever arisen regarding foreign missions, the young Rhode Island pastor, then but 38, was asked to accompany the honored secretary of the board to the far off eastern land, where his thoughts and his heart had so often wandered. He left America in 1852, returning two years later, having spent 18 months in India and Burmah. The reforms he urged and recommended were adopted by his own board, and subsequently by the A. B. C. F. M., the English Baptist Missionary Society, and other societies over the entire world.

Dr. Granger returned from India with the seeds of death in his system. The long period spent in the hot countries had undermined his not too strong constitution, and though he returned to the pastorate of his beloved church, he died at Providence, just as the year 1857 was born, in the 43d year of his age.

In a sermon commemorative of Dr. Granger, written by Dr. Wayland, and which may well be said to have been one of the most finished which ever came from the pen of that gifted scholar and philosopher, he said :

“My acquaintance with Dr. Granger commenced fourteen years since, when he came among us to preach. From that time I have known him intimately, and have been permitted to share with him some of his most important labors. On my first intercourse with him I was deeply impressed with the manly frankness of his bearing, his modest estimate of his own abilities, and the simple-minded devotion to duty which seemed to govern all his decisions. He was then but twenty-eight years of age, yet such was the maturity of his judgment and the solidity of his character, that he already seemed endowed with the wisdom of long experience. I do not believe it ever occurred to you (I am sure it never occurred to me), that we were choosing for our pastor a man younger by far than any who had ever occupied that office among us.

When he became a resident of our city, the elements of his character were soon known and read of all men. The powers of his intellect were active and masculine. The grasp of his mind was vigorous and comprehensive. Prettiness of every kind, and ornament for the sake of ornament were utterly distasteful to him. Passing by incidental and lighter relations, he naturally seized upon the foundation truths of the subject before him, and mastered them with remarkable facility. His capacity for acquisition was large, and hence we were frequently surprised to observe, notwithstanding his numerous engagements, the growing accumulations of his intellectual wealth. His powers of conception belonged rather to the imagination than the fancy. He delighted rather in bold generalizations than in tasteful specialties. Hence his discourses were rich in broad views, essential truths, universal principles, rather than in exquisitiveness of finish, or particular directions in duty. His happiest efforts were those in which his soul was stirred to its utmost depths by expanding views of the glories of redemption, or the coming triumphs of the kingdom of Christ. It was then that he yielded himself to the magnificence of the theme, and, with a full heart, poured forth a torrent of impassioned eloquence which bore his audience irresistibly along with him."

D. L. D. Granger was fitted for college in the schools of Providence, and was graduated at Brown University in the class of 1874. He then read law in Boston University, and for ten years practiced his profession in his native town. In 1889 he was elected city treasurer of Providence, which office he now holds, having been several times reelected.

Black Rock, N. Y., in 1820; died at Buffalo in 1849. His wife died 18 March, 1860, aged 65.

Warren Granger spent his life in Buffalo. He was one of its oldest citizens in point of residence, and a man of the highest character and standing. Born on the old homestead in 1817, he naturally succeeded to its management and control when his brother removed to a distant city. He conducted the large place with consummate skill as a husbandman, while at the same time engaging in all matters which interested the welfare of his native city. While taking an active and successful part in politics, being, with Thurlow Weed and a few others, one of the founders of the Republican party in New York State, he was rarely, if ever, a candidate for office himself. In the days of the war he not only sent his oldest son to the front, but was foremost in aiding the home work always necessary to promote the welfare of the troops in the field. His time and his money were given willingly to the work, and many a family did he take under his especial protection while the father and support carried a musket in Virginia.

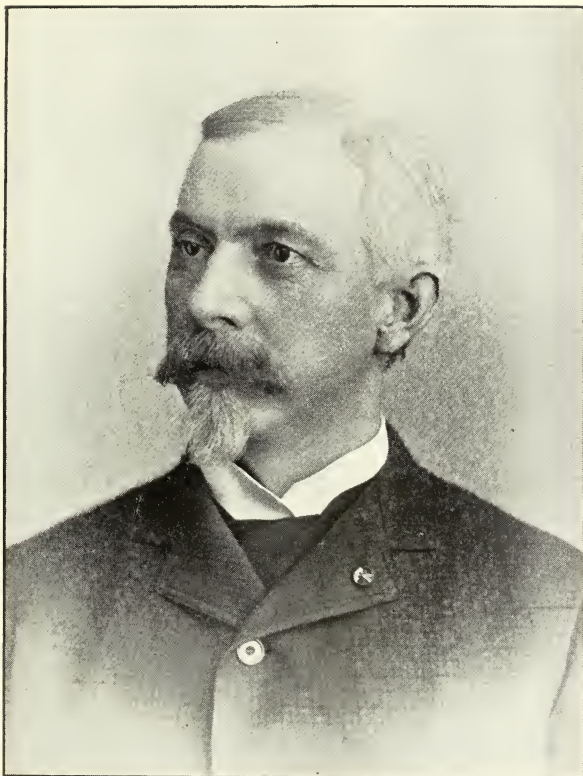

The encroachment of the city finally induced Mr. Granger to sell the homestead and remove into town. His great knowledge of the value of Buffalo real estate made him invaluable as a guide and adviser, and for a time he kept an office where he transacted his business. But his health failing, he went to St. Paul, Minn., to visit his son Col. Warren, Jr., and died there as above.

The name of Warren Granger was, with the older residents of Buffalo, synonymous with all that was honorable and upright in man. Frank and fair with all, his word was never broken or questioned. Honorable in all his intentions, the sincerity of his purpose or advice was never doubted; and few have ever walked the streets of Buffalo who could dispute with him the high pedestal of public esteem and respect on which he ever stood. Generous to a fault, he gave from his ample means more than he ever received in return, and many men and women live to-day who rise up at the mention of his name and call him blessed.

Warren Granger, Jr. (above), was a boy of 17 when the war for the suppression of the rebellion broke out, and at once enlisted in the Twenty-first New York Infantry as a private. This regiment he soon left to assist in raising the One Hundredth New York Infantry, in which he went to the front as a second lieutenant. At the battle of Fair Oaks, in 1862, his first lieutenant was killed and his captain soon resigned. Lieut. Granger was then appointed captain. After much service in the Army of the Potomac the regiment went south and engaged in the siege of Charleston, S. C. In the memorable attack on Fort Wagner, 10 July, 1863, Capt. Granger was shot through the neck and left for dead in the trench under the fort. Feigning death, he escaped the notice of the enemy, and at midnight crawled to the rear. He was invalided for a long time, and on rejoining in 1864 was captured on the James River and imprisoned for nearly 9 months. Upon his return to the regiment he was promoted to the lieutenant-colonelcy, and came home in September, 1865, as brevet colonel in command of the regiment. He soon removed to St. Paul, Minn., where he formed the firm of Granger & Hodge, wholesale coffees and teas. About 1886 he became a member of the P. H. Kelly Mercantile Company of St. Paul, and is now in general management of this the largest wholesale firm in the Northwest. He is one of the best and most esteemed merchants of the flourishing city of his adoption. His address is Col. Warren Granger, St. Paul, Minn.

Capt. Edward Barnum Granger was born at Buffalo April 15, 1819, but while in his teens removed to Chicago. Thence he went to Cincinnati, where he became interested in loading flatboats with produce and shipping it to the southern markets. He often accompanied the boats on these trips, going as far as New Orleans and the Gulf of Mexico. In this business he prospered, and finally owned many boats engaged in the trade. In 1856 he married Mrs. Vina North of Rising Sun, Ind., a widow with two children, and afterward made this point his home. Soon after he became captain of the passenger steamer Lady Franklin, plying between Pittsburg and Nashville, but shortly bought another and ran from Cincinnati to Louisville. At the breaking out of the war he was in the South, but, hiding his money on his person and disguising himself with a linen duster, one shoe, one boot, white cotton gloves, and clothes to match, he passed safely through the lines without being searched. After the war closed he purchased the steamer Osceola, and, loading her with produce, went to New Orleans and thence to Mobile, where he put her into the cotton trade on the Alabama River. Here he remained till he was stricken with yellow fever, from which he recovered in a much-weakened state. He then returned to Rising Sun, where he remained for a time, but finally proceeded on business to New Orleans, where he was run over by a street car, from the effects of which he died.

She possessed remarkable musical talent, which showed itself at an early age, so that, when only 10 years of age, she sang in church and concert. the time. After some years Miss Granger removed to New York, where she was received as a pupil by Barili (a half brother of Adelina Patti), who was then considered the first teacher in the metropolis. There, also, she sang in churches and in concerts of the highest merits, and so signal was her success that in 1866 she was enabled to go to Paris and pursue her studies under Gilbert Duprez, the famous master, and became a member of his private family.

In 1868 she returned to her native land, where her beautiful voice at once placed her in the front rank of American singers, while her beauty and charms of manner gave her a social success as flattering as her musical one. In 1869 she married Col. Edwin Barlow Dow, a soldier of distinction, and retired from the musical stage for a time. While visiting Europe for a second time, however, she decided to resume her career, and accordingly studied under the distinguished Italian master, Vanuccini, in Florence. On her return to Boston, Mrs. Granger-Dow resumed the place she had vacated upon the concert and oratorio stage.

She appeared under Theodore Thomas, being the first woman ever permitted to sing with his orchestra, and her success led to many engagements throughout Canada and the United States. She also made frequent tours with some of the leading organizations of the country, especially with the Mendelssohn Quintette Club, the Bethoven, and the Philharmonic Clubs of Boston. In 1876 the Anna Granger-Dow English Opera Company was formed, and for several seasons sang with marked success. Mrs. Granger-Dow's rendition of the roles of Marguerite in Faust, and Leonora in Trovatore, received everywhere the highest praise.

In 1879 Colonel Dow removed to New York, where his wife repeated her Boston successes, singing with the Brooklyn and New York Philharmonic societies, under the direction of the famous Dr. Leopold Damrosch. She also sang with Ole Bull, in the last concerts that distinguished musician gave. Mrs. Granger-Dow has now retired permanently from the stage, and enjoys the

s. of Boaz; b. 10 Aug., 1807, at Phelps, N. Y.; m. 13 Jan., 1827, to Eliza, dau. of Harry Darrell (d. 9 Feb., 1851) and Martha Parker (d. 9 Feb., 1851) of North Royalton, O. She b. 10 Aug., 1810, at New Haven, Ct.; d. 9 Feb., 1851, at North Royalton.

Mr. and Mrs. Darrell were originally from New Haven.

Aaron Granger was born at Phelps, N. Y., and when a mere lad accompanied his father to North Royalton, O. In 1823, in company with two companions, and yet a boy in his teens, he tramped back to Phelps, where, after spending a few months, he returned home on foot. At the age of 20 he married and settled down to a farmer's life. He now lives in his old age on his farm at North Royalton with his daughter, Mrs. John Pay, Jr.

Leonard (b. 12 Dec., 1802; d. 28 Oct., 1836), of Amherst, Mass. She b. 28 Feb., 1825, at Painesville, O.

Julius Granger was born at Phelps, N. Y., 16 Dec., 1805. In the year 1843 he removed to Michigan, stopping first at Adrian, and soon after (April, 1844) settled in Grand Rapids, then having less than 1,000 inhabitants. Here he opened a dry goods store with A. C. Cary, and built a tub and pail manufactory, in which he lost by accident his right hand. Later he organized with Col. Charles Stewart of Battle Creek, the first daily stage line between that place and Grand Rapids, and ran the first "Concord stages" into the town. In the spring of 1852 he began his career as hotel-keeper, keeping first the "National" and then the "Rathbun," then the leading hotels in the place. He was an ideal Boniface, affable, and with a pleasant word and smile for all. He was a prominent member of the Masonic order, a Knight Templar, and a charter member of the first lodge formed in Grand Rapids. He was closely identified with the interests of the city until a year before his death. He was a public-spirited man, a friend of the poor, and loved and respected by all who knew him. He died 26 April, 1871.

William E. Granger has spent all his life in the employ of the railway. He saw the first train start out of Springfield, Mass., in October, 1839; eight years after took his first trip on a locomotive, running from Pittsfield to Springfield, Mass. From that time till 1868 he was an engineer on the road between Worcester, Mass., and Albany, N. Y. In 1872 he became master mechanic on the Utica and Black River road, and then held successively the same position on the Springfield and Northwestern Railroad and Connecticut Central. Since 1880 he has been running on the Athol branch of the Boston and Albany. Few men in that business are more trusted or better liked than Mr. Granger. He is high in Masonic circles, being a member of Hampton Lodge of Springfield.

The Hon. Barlow Granger (above) was born at Cayuga, in the County of Tioga, N. Y., 31 May, 1816. Soon after his father moved to Newtown (now Elmira), and afterward in 1823 he moved to Rochester, N. Y. Late in the fall of 1829 his Uncle Daniel came to Rochester, and Barlow accompanied him home to Steuben County on foot. He completed his visit with his uncle and journeyed in winter on foot to Courtland, N. Y., where his parents then were. Upon the establishment of the Courtland Advocate he went into the office to learn the printing business. The paper soon fell into the hands of the Hon. Henry S. Randall, with whom he remained till 1835, when he set out as a journeyman printer. He found himself in Albany with 12 cents in his pocket, and, leaving his trunk as security for his dinner, he tramped to Troy, where he obtained work. He drifted about for some years, being at New York, New Haven, Ct., Hudson, O., Cleveland, and Detroit. In 1838 he was in Albany again, where he set up the first Statutes of Wisconsin. The next year he drifted to Columbus, Ga., and finally went to Charleston, S. C., where he was employed on the Courier. He returned to Albany where he remained till the spring of 1847, when he went to Buffalo, and then started on a tour up the lakes. He visited Chicago, and then pushed on through Wisconsin to St. Paul, Minn., then an Indian trading-post. Late in the fall he took steamer from St. Paul to St. Louis, intending to return to Albany, but he went to work instead on the St. Louis Republican. The next summer he, with a friend from Albany, took a trip into Iowa, and followed the valley of the Des Moines River to Fort Des Moines, then a hamlet, consisting solely of log huts erected for the soldiers and one or two frame buildings. He was pleased with the situation; and though not going there with such a view, determined to remain. He was admitted to the bar, and opened a law office and real estate agency in the summer of 1848.

Soon after Mr. Granger established the first paper published at Des Moines, and called it the Iowa Star. He was appointed on the staff of Governor Hampstead, with the rank of Colonel. He was for a time prosecuting attorney for Polk County, and then served as County Judge. He was then elected Mayor of Des Moines, and later Mayor of the suburban town of Sovastopol. Mr. Granger of course invested in real estate, and the natural growth of the city has made him independently wealthy. His farm is now in the limits of the city, and faces the State Capitol. He is of course "one of the oldest inhabitants" in length of residence, if not in years. He is highly esteemed by his neighbors, and no celebration of the city is complete without the presence of Barlow Granger. Mr. Granger married at Des Moines in 1856, Mrs. Rush, whose maiden name was Lucinda W. Powers. She moved on to the 80-acre farm of her husband, and still resides there with him.

C.; m. 14 Feb., 1830, to Sarah Arnold, dau. of Stephen Arnold Douglas, M.D. (he b. 16 Jan., 1782; d. 1 July, 1813), and Sallie Fisk (b. 24 March, 1789; d. 29 May, 1869), of Brandon, Vt. She b. 29 Oct., 1811, at Brandon; l. 1892. P. O., Clifton Springs, N. Y.

Dr. Douglas was originally from Stephentown, N. Y., and his widow became the second wife of the father of Julius N. The latter consequently married his step-sister.

The Hon. Julius N. Granger was born in a log hut on the farm two miles west of Clifton Springs, N. Y. (then called Manchester), which has ever since been the site of the family home. He was educated in the schools of the town, and in 1830 married the sister of the late Hon. Stephen A. Douglas, so many years the distinguished Senator from Illinois. His step-mother was the mother of his wife. At that time he was a little more than 19 years old, and his wife was 16 months younger. In his 22d year he was appointed a justice of the peace, and served for more than 18 years. On the 6th of April, 1853, he was appointed, by President Pierce, Recorder of the General Land Office at Washington, and held this office till he resigned, 3 March, 1871. He was then appointed Examiner of Pensions, which office he held at the time of his death. He was in the division of pensions for the war of 1812.

As Recorder he signed every land-warrant which was issued during his 28 years of office, and his signature is familiar to millions of people who took up land from the Government. During the Rebellion he took charge of the distribution of supplies from the State of New York for the use of the sick and disabled soldiers in the hospitals at Washington, and by countless acts of kindness showed himself a true friend of the suffering men. Mr. Granger died in Washington, but was buried in the town of his birth, where his widow still resides.

LUTHER GRANGER,

s. of Luther; b. 8 July, 1791, at Worthington, Mass.; d. 10 April, 1876, at Worthington; m. (1) 25 Feb., 1813, to Susannah, dau. of John Geer and Owner Tower of Worthington (she b. 6 Feb., 1792; d. 30 Aug., 1832), (2) 6 June, 1833, Persis Smith (she b. 1 May, 1805).

Luther Granger was tall and dignified in bearing, with piercing black eyes. He was extremely careful in his appearance and attire, and was often thought by strangers to be a professional man. He worked with his father on the farm until he was 20, when he purchased a farm on the hillside, still called Granger's Hill. He was a model farmer, and is said to have conducted the best farm in three counties. He was a constant attendant at church, and his pew was never empty. He held various town offices. In his old age he removed into the village of Worthington, where he died.

FRANCIS GRANGER,

s. of Gideon; b. 1 Dec., 1792, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 31 Aug., 1868, at Canandaigua, N. Y.; m. 20 May, 1817, to Cornelia Rutson, dau. of Jeremiah Van Rensselaer and Sybilla Adeline Kane of Utica, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs Van Rensselaer died and were buried at Canandaigua.

Francis Granger was born in the house where his father and grandfather had lived—on the High Street in Suffield, Ct., where now stand the buildings of the Connecticut Literary Institute—and at the age of 16 entered Yale College as a student. He was graduated in the class of 1811. His father having removed to Canandaigua in 1816, his son followed him there and took up the study of the law, and after his admission to the bar commenced the practice of his profession in that village. He showed, however, a marked preference for the excitement and bustle of political life, and under the able tutelage of his father he launched himself on the sea of public life, where he was destined to win credit and renown.

About this time the excitement growing out of the alleged abduction of Morgan by members of the Masonic fraternity reached a prodigious height. Various rumors were spread in regard to the disposition of the unfortunate man, who was well known in Canandaigua. People in the entire State were excited, especially those in its western portion. Under such conditions it was not difficult to arouse a bitter feeling against the members of the Masonic fraternity. Politicians seized the opportunity to form a new party, and young men looking for position, fame, and emoluments were easily induced to join the movement.

Among the young men of that day who were foremost in the anti-Masonic movement may be mentioned William H. Seward, Millard Fillmore, Thurlow Weed, and Francis Granger. Once into it they labored hard for the success of the party. In 1825 Mr. Granger decided to put to a test his political standing, and announced himself a candidate for the Assembly of New York. He was elected. When in the House he exhibited much force and spirit, and gave such satisfaction to his constituents that he was reelected the following year.

He was by this time recognized as a leading man in his party — vigorous, energetic, and watchful. In 1828 he was honored by the anti-Masonic party with its nomination for governor, and at the same time was nominated by the Adams party for lieutenant-governor. The latter nomination he accepted, but was defeated by the ticket headed by Martin Van Buren. In the next year Mr. Granger went back to the Assembly, and in the subsequent year was a candidate for governor against Mr. Throop, by whom he was defeated. In 1831 Mr. Granger returned to the Legislature for the last time.

In 1832 a movement was inaugurated between the Clay Republicans on the one side and the anti-Masonic party on the other to bring about a coalition of the two factions in the State. All differences having been healed, Francis Granger was nominated for governor, but he was defeated by William L. Marcy.

FRANCIS GRANGER.

No. 2636.

When the Whig party was formed two years later Mr. Granger became a recognized leader. In 1834, while the State convention was in session, he sought the nomination for governor, but William H. Seward secured the prize and was elected. Later in the same year he was nominated and elected to Congress from the twenty-sixth district.

When the anti-Masonic party held its national convention at Philadelphia in 1836 (the last it ever held) Mr. Granger was nominated on the ticket with Gen. William H. Harrison. The Whigs nominated Gen. Harrison, with John Tyler for second place, and Massachusetts put forward Daniel Webster as its candidate for president and placed Francis Granger on the same ticket for vice-president. There was no election by the electoral vote for vice-president, and it was thrown into the Senate to decide, the only time in history where such a thing has occurred. The Senate voted for Col. Richard M. Johnson 33, for Francis Granger 16.

In 1838, when the Whig party had become successful, Mr. Granger was again elected to Congress and succeeded himself at the subsequent election. In 1841 he was nominated by Gen. Harrison for the position of postmaster-general in the cabinet, but experienced some difficulty in having his nomination confirmed by the Senate on account of his anti-slavery views. A satisfactory arrangement was however made, and he took his portfolio. Upon the death of Gen. Harrison Mr. Tyler succeeded to the presidency, and when the memorable rupture in the cabinet took place the resignation of the postmaster-general was handed to his chief.

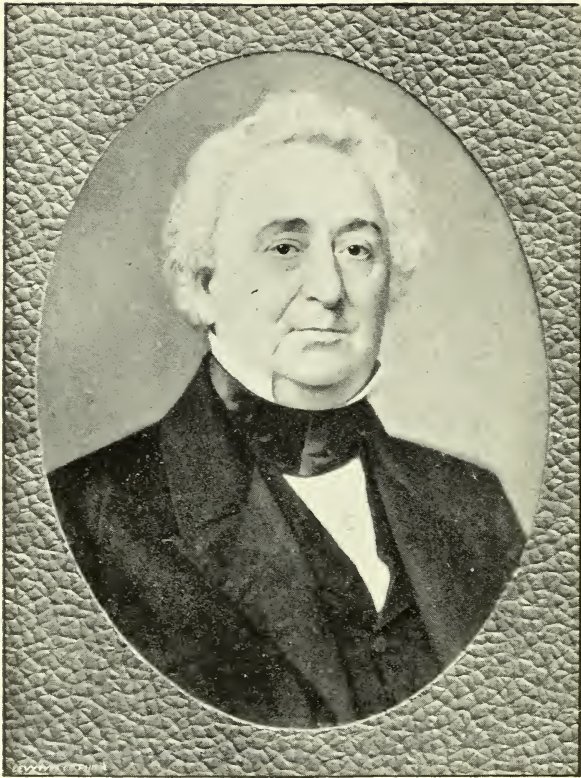

On returning home he was elected to Congress, but declined to take his seat and resolutely resisted all attempts to bring him back into the arena of public life; even declining the offer of a foreign mission. He yielded, indeed, so far as to occasionally preside at the meetings of his political friends when some more than ordinary and important proceedings were in view; and it may not be forgotten that his silver-gray hair gave the name to a party which originated at a convention of which he was the chairman. Nor did he refuse to go to Washington for a few weeks at the solicitation of friends and by appointment of the governor of New York as one of the delegates to what was called the "peace convention" in February, 1861.

Mr. Granger was a man of great intelligence, of quick wit, of warm heart, of popular manners, and of impressive speech both in public and private life. Few persons have had more friends in all parts of the country. Webster and Clay, Preston and Chittenden, Edward Everett and Amos Lawrence, and many others of all parties and sections were on terms of intimacy with him, to which they admitted but few others. His nature was peculiarly attractive to young and old, and he seemed incapable of making an enemy of any one. Singularly happy in his temperament, he made every one happy about him. His sunny disposition was never quenched or clouded by disappointment or old age, and when at last he was called to die under circumstances full of sadness he uttered no word of impatience or repining, but threw himself with quiet resignation and perfect trust upon the mercies of his God and the merits of his Saviour.

It would be meet that such a character and such a kindly disposition should dwell in a more than usually beautiful earthly body, and in Francis Granger the combination was seen. He was over six feet tall, and of commanding and striking figure. His finely-formed head, crowned by its famous silver-gray hair, showed a face attractive to every one who crossed his path. In the halls of Saratoga, where he passed a portion of each season, on the crowded streets of the city, in the drawing room, or on the platform, he was the observed of all observers. His presence was felt as well as seen, and those who once caught but even a glimpse of his manly figure never forgot it or him.

Mr. Granger lived and died at the old Granger homestead in Canandaigua which was built by his father in Elizabeth Chapin Williams (above) was the granddaughter of Gen. Israel Chapin, the first settler of Canandaigua. Harriet, second wife of John Albert, was born 28 March, 1804; d. 12 Aug., 1868. Her mother, Mary Phelps, was born at Granville, Mass., 5 Sept., 1778; d. 11 Sept., 1859. She was the daughter of the Hon. Oliver Phelps, who, with Nathaniel Gorham, Esq., of Charlestown, Mass., bought about 1788 from the State of Massachusetts what was known as the Phelps & Gorham purchase. This was a large tract of land in Central New York, and included the present site of Canandaigua. Michael Jackson, the father of Amasa, and his four sons were officers in the Revolutionary army. They were all charter members of the Massachusetts Society of the Cincinnati.

John Albert Granger (above) lived in Canandaigua. His house stood on the main street a short distance below that of his father. He also owned a charming country seat upon Lake Canandaigua, which now belongs to his son. He was a man of peculiarly fine presence and courtly manners.

John Orville Granger removed to Painesville, O., in 1816, and a few years later removed to Chardon, O., where he lived for over 40 years. He was a man of considerable prominence in the community. Soon after settling at Chardon he became the proprietor of two or more important stage lines, one running from Fairport to Canton, and the other from Cleveland to Wellsville.
 He was a widower at the time of his decease.

HENRY S. GRANGER,

s. of Epaphras K.; b. 18 July, 1792, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 28 March, 1858, at Newark Valley, N. Y.; m. (1) to Nancy, dau. of John Sutton of Burlington, N. J., and Sally Schuyler (she b. 1800 at Jacksonville, N. Y.; d. 29 July, 1826, at Ithaca, N. Y.). (2) 1830 Abigail, dau. of Asa Bement and Mary Brown of Stockbridge, Mass. (she b. 18 June, 1794; d. 14 Nov., 1862). She lived at the time of her marriage at Newark Valley, Tioga County, N. Y.

Henry S. Granger, son of Epaphras King Granger, was born at Suffield, Ct., 18 July, 1792. He received a common school education in the schools of his native town, and before reaching his majority commenced the career of a school teacher, which vocation he followed mainly until the year 1817, when, equipped with an open letter from Gideon Granger, postmaster-general, addressed to "whomsoever it may concern," introducing him as "my kinsman," and commending him to their "confidence," he left Connecticut for the State of New York, first stopping at the village of New Hartford, Oneida County, now a suburb of the city of Utica.

For reasons not now known he left New Hartford after a few months' residence there and located in the village of Jacksonville, Tompkins County, N. Y., where, in the following year (1818), he married as above.

At Jacksonville he engaged in the business of a country merchant, and was appointed postmaster, which office he held for several years until his removal to Ithaca, the county seat of Tompkins, where his wife died.

In 1830 he married his second wife, and soon after removed to Newark Valley, where he continued the business of a country merchant, and resided there continuously until his death, which occurred in 1858 at the age of 66 years.

HENRY S. GRANGER.

No. 2730.

Before leaving Suffield for the State of New York he was invited by his distinguished kinsman Gideon Granger to enter his office as a student of law, which he declined because of his ambition for the career of a country merchant, a vocation that requires for success characteristics that he did not possess naturally and never acquired.

At the time during the war of 1812 when the British fleet blockaded the harbor of New London and threatened an invasion of the State, the State called into its service the organized militia to garrison the fort in the harbor of New London and to resist any attempt to land forces there. Mr. Granger, then only 20 years of age, volunteered, and was a non-commissioned officer in Capt. Collins's company of Connecticut militia and served with his company until the blockade was raised. For that service he received, in common with all other soldiers who served in that war, a patent for a section of public land.

During Mr. Granger's residence at Jacksonville he was chosen to the office of coroner of the county, and was also postmaster of the village for a number of years. In 1845 he took the State census of Tioga County, in 1850 the United States census, and again in 1855 the State census. He was for many years county inspector of school teachers.

Mr. Granger was a man of great dignity of character and personal bearing, and possessed an analytical and logical mind eminently qualifying him for a career in a liberal profession.

Mrs. Deborah Huntington Kent was a daughter of John and Mehitabel (Steele) Huntington of Tolland, Ct.

Mrs. Ann Eliza Kent spent her youth at the old Granger homestead on Taintor's Hill in Suffield under the care of her grandparents. In 1821 she left Suffield, Ct., for Suffield, O., where she lived for a time. In 1824 she removed to Bainbridge, where she married and went to housekeeping in a log hut. In 1833 she and her husband bought a large farm in West Bainbridge, which they named "Locust Grove." Here she has ever since lived, and to-day in her old age her house is the spot to which she moved 60 years ago. "Locust Grove" is in charge of her son Gamaliel H.

dau. of Oliver; b. 18 March, 1819, at Lower Sandusky, O.; m. 2 April, 1838, to Alexander C., s. of Elijah Ross (b. 1785; d. Nov., 1864) and Mary —— (b. 10 Sept., 1788; d. 29 Sept., 1862) of Zanesville, O. He b. 31 May, 1812; d. 26 Feb., 1883.

Alexander C. Ross for many years owned and conducted the principal jewelry store at Zanesville. He had an especial aptitude and fondness for chemistry in its application to mechanics. Reading of Daguerre's experiments, he followed them with apparatus constructed by himself; and about 1841 succeeded in making the first daguerreotype portrait ever taken west of New York. The like aptitude and tastes made him prominent in the Zanesville Gas Light Company. For many years, up to his death, he was president of that company. His widow resides in Zanesville.

Charles Hill Ross (above) was commissioned first lieutenant in the Thirteenth Indiana volunteers about 1 June, 1861, and was with that regiment at the battles of Rich Mountain and Kernstown, in April, 1862. He served during the remainder of the war as an aide-de-camp on the staffs of Generals Griffin, Bartlett, and others in the Fifth Corps. On 2 June, 1864, he was captured while carrying an order. Early in 1865, by the aid of Gen. Hardee, a classmate of Gen. Robert S. Granger at West Point, he was exchanged in time to be present at the surrender of Gen. Lee. He was brevetted Major for gallant services. Major Ross resides at Milwaukee, Wis., where he has charge of the affairs of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

OLIVER HENRY GRANGER,

s. of Oliver; b. 21 April, 1827, at Zanesville, O.; m. Nov., 1853, at Groton, N. Y., Hannah Bothwell of Groton.

Oliver Henry was engaged in the manufacture and repair of carriages, wagons, etc.; and in company with John E. Granger (a first cousin hereinafter referred to) and others conducted business on the old premises for several years. Financial reverses followed and compelled him to act as a skilled mechanic in the factories of others. He resides on North Third Street, Zanesville.

MOSES MOORHEAD GRANGER,

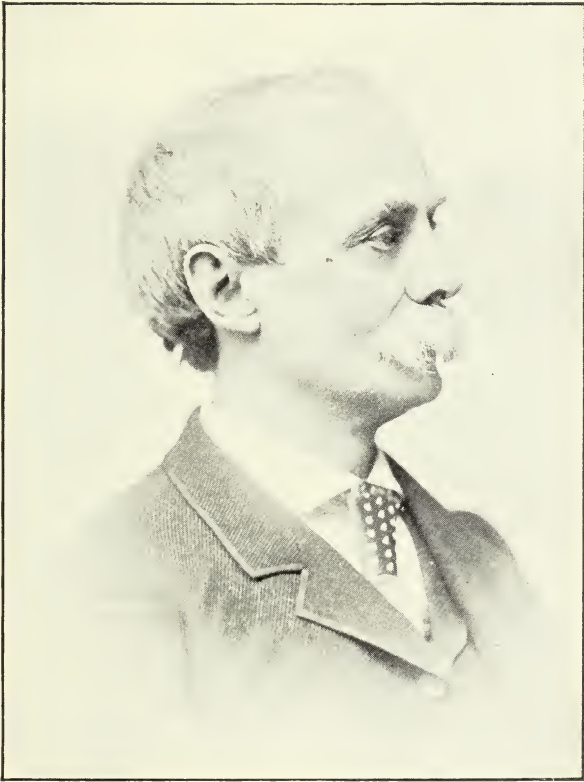

P. O., Zanesville, Ohio.

1453

s. of James; b. 22 Oct., 1831, at Zanesville, O.; m. 29 Dec., 1858, to Mary Hoyt, dau. of William J. Reese (b. at Philadelphia, Pa.; d. Jan., 1883) and Mary E. Sherman (b. 1813; still living) of Lancaster, Ohio. She b. 23 Aug., 1839, at Lancaster.

Moses Moorhead Granger was educated in Zanesville; graduated as valedictorian of his class at Kenyon College in 1850; was admitted to the bar of Ohio, 4 Jan., 1853; practiced at Zanesville; married at Lancaster, Ohio, 29 Dec., 1858, Mary Hoyt Reese, daughter of William J. Reese of Philadelphia, Pa., and his wife, Mary E., who is the elder (now the only surviving) sister of General Sherman and Senator Sherman.

During the War of the Rebellion, Moses served as captain Eighteenth United States infantry, from 29 June, 1861, to 26 June, 1862; as major and lieutenant-colonel of One Hundred and Twenty-Second Ohio volunteer infantry, from 10 Sept., 1862, to 16 Dec., 1864, when he resigned. While in the Eighteenth United States infantry, he served in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Mississippi, in Gen. R. L. McCook's brigade of Gen. Geo. H. Thomas's division. While in the One Hundred and Twenty-Second Ohio he served in West Virginia, Maryland, and Virginia. He was under fire in the fighting between Milroy's division and Ewell's corps at Winchester, Va., 13, 14, and 15 June, 1863; in French's combat with Ewell, at Locust Grove, Va., 27 Nov., 1863; in Grant's battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court House, and Cold Harbor; in Sheridan's battles of the Opequan, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek—all in the Shenandoah Valley; and in divers skirmishes and small affairs.

On the recommendation of his brigade and division commanders, President Lincoln nominated him to be colonel of United States volunteers by brevet, to rank as such from the 19th of Oct., 1864, for gallant and meritorious services in the present campaign before Richmond, Va., and in the Shenandoah Valley. The Senate confirmed the nomination, and he was duly commissioned as such by Andrew Johnson. His civil services have been as follows: city solicitor of Zanesville, from April, 1865, to August, 1866; member of Putnam Village council, April to August, 1866; prosecuting attorney of Muskingum County, January to December, 1866; judge of common pleas, first subdivision, eighth judicial district of Ohio, 10 Dec., 1866, to 9 Oct., 1871; reporter to the Supreme Court of Ohio, October, 1872, to March, 1874; judge of the second Supreme Court Commission of Ohio, 17 April, 1883, to same date in 1885. By the unanimous choice of his four associate judges he served as chief judge during both years. He himself terminated his term of office in every case, except that of judge in the Supreme Court Commission, by resignation.

In 1871, although both parties wished him to continue as common pleas judge, he declined a renomination, resigned the office, and resumed practice at the bar a few months before the end of his term.

When the Ohio Legislature created the Second Supreme Court Commission, to serve for two years from 17 April, 1883, he consented to be appointed one of its five judges because he wished to urge a change in the mode of examining cases by the highest State court. While reporter in 1872-3 he had observed how slowly the judges progressed with their docket, and was convinced that much more work could be as well done in less time. During no year prior to April, 1883, had that court disposed of more than 257 cases on the general docket.

The Second Commission, under his lead, decided about 330 cases on said docket within its first year. The Supreme Court itself later adopted the improved mode of work, and since 1887 has averaged 315 cases each year.

Judge Granger declined to be a candidate for the supreme bench of the State. In 1889 the judges and bar of southeastern Ohio and prominent lawyers in Cincinnati, Columbus, Springfield, and Toledo urged the president to appoint him to the seat on the United States supreme bench made vacant by the death of Associate Justice Stanley Matthews.

He warmly loved his alma mater, Kenyon College. In 1866 he was chosen one of its trustees. He resigned in 1871, but accepted a reelection in 1873 and served continuously until in June, 1888, the board of trustees, on his urgency, accepted his resignation, which he had tendered in January, 1887. Among those who served with him as college trustees were Chief Justice Waite, Senator Stevenson of Kentucky, Secretary Delano, and Rufus King.

In April, 1865, he was appointed administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed, of John McIntire, succeeding Gen. Charles B. Goddard, who died in 1864. His co-administrators were Daniel Brush and Charles C. Russell. The former was aged and the latter engrossed by his duties as cashier and manager of a city bank. Hence the active management of the estate fell to Judge Granger. Owing to the decease of the other two he has been sole administrator since 4 June, 1880. John McIntire's widow survived until 1854, and that fact had necessarily delayed the development of plans for giving effect to the devise for the charitable purpose suggested by Ebenezer Granger. Some difficult legal questions required construction by the Supreme Court. Judge Granger pressed these to a decision in 1868 (see 17 Ohio State Reports, p. 352), and from that date the McIntire board, which acts with and by the administrator, began its most effective work. Gen. Robert S. Granger is one of that board, and thus aids in furtherance of the benevolence planned so long ago by his father.

The McIntire Academy was built under Daniel Conners, the original executor. The John McIntire Children's Home, the arrangement with the Zanesville Atheneum, and the regular annual payment for books and clothing for poor school children in the city belong to the period beginning in 1868.

Blessed with good health, although he lost his left leg below the knee by a railroad accident in September, 1865, Judge Granger continues to practice law and administer the McIntire estate, and maintains his home in Zanesville. Of his children, Alfred Hoyt left the senior class of Kenyon College in September, 1886, to enter the School of Technology in Boston, and is now an architect in Chicago; Sherman Moorhead, who graduated at Kenyon College in 1890, is a law student.

ARTHUR GRANGER,

s. of Thaddeus; b. 17 April, 1803, at Suffield, Ct.; d. 2 Aug., 1845, at Providence, R. I.; m. (1) to Elizabeth Tyler, (2) 4 May, 1836, Sarah Alcoin, dau. of William Rowen and Anna Jackson Waters of Wilmington, Del. She b. 6 May, 1815; d. 17 April, 1887.

The Rev. Arthur Granger spent the days of his boyhood near the Connecticut River, in the outskirts of Suffield. A bright energetic boy, he was "his father's favorite son," and the father wished him to stay and be a farmer, but Arthur longed for an education; and, having become a Christian, felt that it was his duty to study for the ministry. His father desired to educate him, if at all, for the bar, and, thus cut off, Arthur was forced to work his way through college, and he was finally graduated at Princeton Theological Seminary. The hardships endured helped to form his character and mould a stern man, but this sternness was only outside. His first marriage was a happy one, but both wife and little one were buried within a year. While in charge of the Presbyterian Church at Wilmington, Del., he married Sarah Rowen, daughter of a Wilmington merchant, William Rowen, who was an Irish Presbyterian, and the mother a beautiful Quakeress. This was during the exciting days of the Presbyterian controversy between the Old and New School; and there are memories of the utterly fearless way in which a young man dared to spring to his feet in General Assembly and correct some statements made by the leading man of the Old School, Dr. Robert J. Breckenridge of Kentucky. People were startled, and inquired who he was. It was Arthur Granger, and the fearlessness then shown was the same which led him afterwards in New England to speak on the platform as an Abolitionist. Removing from Delaware to New England, Mr. Granger held successive charges in Meriden and Middletown, Ct., and Providence, R. I. At each parish he made devoted friends. Hardly was he fairly at work in Providence, when he sickened with typhoid fever and died at the early age of 41 years, leaving behind him a character for bravery and devotion to his work which is yet a memory full of gladness to his surviving wife and children.

SANFORD GRANGER.

s. of Eldad: b. 12 March, 1796, at Chesterfield, N. H.; d. 17 May, 1882, at Bellows Falls, Vt.; m. 26 Feb., 1826, to Abigail Stevens of Chester, Vt. She b. 16 Jan., 1800; d. 18 Nov., 1877. They lived at Bellows Falls, Vt.

Sanford Granger was a mechanic and millwright, and obtained considerable reputation as a bridge builder. At 23 he removed to Rockingham, Vt., where he bought a mill site and erected a mill which was carried away by a freshet. Some years after he erected a mill on the Saxton's River, near Bellows Falls, Vt., which he conducted for a long time. He was one of the founders of the Methodist Church at Bellows Falls. In 1855 he erected a three-story brick block in the village, the ground floor of which was used as a store. He was an ardent abolitionist, and active in assisting to Canada many a fleeing slave. He died of diphtheria, aged 87.

	s. of Eldad; b. 3 April, 1802, at Westmoreland, N. H.; m. (1) 1829 to Olive Conant, (2) 19 Jan., 1835, Dorcas Weeks, (3) 16 March, 1853, Margaret Shipman of Binghamton, N. Y.
	Elihu Granger early learned the millwright business, and after building some mills in New Hampshire and Vermont he removed to Troy, N. Y., where he was some time in a machine shop. For the next few years he lived in various parts of New York State, and in August, 1836, he started on horseback for Chicago. He and his horse were taken by boat from Buffalo to Detroit, whence he pushed on across the then territory of Michigan.

After his arrival Indians numbering more than 4,000 gathered at the spot to receive their payments. He built a foundry and machine shop on the river bank just where the Chicago & Northwestern railroad station is. He sold this out in 1853. From 1843 to 1856 he was an alderman in Chicago, and in 1856 was superintendent of public works. After 1856 he removed to Canton, Mo., where he erected a flour mill. During the war he was employed to build a bridge over Deep River, which he did in 24 hours, so that the troops passed. After the war he returned to Chicago, where he was burned out in the great fire. He has since removed to Scatterwood, S. D., where he lives with his son C. S. Granger.

David A. Granger was Captain in the Boston Light Infantry at the outbreak of the Rebellion, afterwards Captain in a Michigan regiment, and finally in the Eleventh Massachusetts Infantry.

Col. Brownell Granger writes of him: "When my regiment left Washington for the battle of Bull Run, he (then a citizen) obtained from one of the captains a uniform, musket, and equipments, and marched in the ranks as an enlisted man, entirely without my knowledge. When engaged in trying to save Ricketts's battery from its last position in that eventful battle, I was astonished at seeing a man leave the ranks and come to me, and more so to recognize in that man my own brother, who came to my side at a critical moment to advise me what to do. He had served with Walker at Nicaragua.

For his personal courage displayed that day he was commissioned by Gov. Andrew of Massachusetts as second lieutenant in the Eleventh Massachusetts, and was killed at the battle of Hatcher's Run, Va., at the head of the consolidated veterans of the First, Eleventh, and Sixteenth Massachusetts regiments. To Gen. Carr and his officers who bade him good bye as he lay mortally wounded, he said, "It's all right: I have done my duty."

Karle Henry Granger (above) was born at Barnard, Vt., but was carried by his parents to Ames, Ia., when eight months old. Here he was educated in the public schools, and later was graduated from the Iowa State College in 1888. He then commenced teaching, being elected principal of the High School at Harwich, Mass., in 1889, remaining there two years. During this time he took up the study of medicine, and was graduated at the summer school of Dartmouth College, at Hanover, N. H., in 1892. His permanent post-office address is Randolph, Mass.

The editor takes great pleasure in acknowledging his deep obligation to Dr. Granger, who has successfully taken in charge the preparation of that portion of this

s. of Henry Hinsdale; b. 14 Aug., 1842, at Hardwick, Mass.; m. (1) March, 1865, to Carrie Pearson of New Orleans (she d. Sept., 1870), (2) 15 Feb., 1872, at Salt Lake City, Miriam Vilate Decker (she d. 24 Jan., 1888), (3) 14 Aug., 1888, Nellie Mabel, dau. of Charles H. Angell of Providence, R. I.

Col. Louis Edwin Granger was educated as a civil engineer in the office of Daniel Granger of Boston. At the outbreak of the Rebellion he enlisted 19 April, 1861, in the Boston City Guards, which became Company A, Fourth Battalion of Rifles, and later the Thirteenth Massachusetts Infantry. Mr. Granger served with this regiment until after the second battle of Fredericksburg, and on 7 March, 1863, was appointed second lieutenant Third Regiment, United States Infantry. He proceeded to New Orleans, serving there on the staff of Gen. Ullmann as aid-de-camp and assistant adjutant-general. He remained on the staff of this officer until August, 1865, and was then assistant provost-marshal-general of the Department of the Gulf. On 7 March, 1867, he was mustered out as captain and brevet lieutenant-colonel. On the same day he was appointed second lieutenant Fortieth United States Infantry, and brevetted captain for gallant and meritorious conduct at Antietam and Port Hudson. He served on the staff of Gen. Miles during the reconstruction of North Carolina, and retired from service in September, 1869.

Col. Granger then settled in Louisiana, where he was assistant adjutant-general of the State and brigadier-general of State troops. He is now interested in mining property, with an office at 136 Liberty street, New York, and a resident of Tenafly, N. J.

In 1889 Col. Granger erected at his own expense in the town of Hardwick a handsome public monument to the memory of the natives of that town who fell in the war of the Rebellion. It was dedicated on the Fourth of July of that year. It stands not only as a perpetual monument to the brave men who went into the deadly struggle, but to the generosity and liberal spirit of its donor.

REED B. GRANGER, M.D.,

P. O., New York City.

s. of Daniel T.; b. 28 Feb., 1841, at Eastport, Me.; m. Oct., 1866, to Hester G., dau. of Charles H. Billings of South Framingham, Mass.

Dr. Reed B. Granger, after a good common school and seminary education, entered Harvard Medical College in 1859. The outbreak of the civil war, however, unsettled his plans, and on May 11, 1861, he enlisted as Hospital Steward in the Ninth Regiment of Massachusetts Infantry. He served in that capacity until the following spring, when he was discharged. He entered the Sanitary Commission in June, 1862, and was assigned to duty on the James River.

In November, 1862, he enlisted as a private in Company G of the Forty-first regiment of Massachusetts Infantry, which in 1863 was changed to cavalry and numbered the Third regiment. He was connected with this organization until the close of the war, May 27, 1865, and during a portion of the time on staff duty with the following named generals: N. A. M. Dudley, as ordnance officer of the Fourth brigade, cavalry division, Department of the Gulf; J. J. Reynolds and T. W. Sherman, as assistant provost-marshal of the defenses of New Orleans; Gordon Granger, as aid-de-camp before Mobile; W. S. Hancock and A. T. A. Torbert, as assistant provost-marshal-general of the Middle Military Division. In 1863 he was promoted from the rank of fourth sergeant to that of second lieutenant; and in 1864 to the rank of first lieutenant.

He took part with his regiment in the battles of Irish Bend, Franklin, Cane River, Henderson's Hill, White Store, Natchitoches, Pleasant Hill, Sabine Cross Roads (in which he acted as aid, and received from his commander, Gen. Dudley, a personal commendation for his gallantry in carrying an order for change of position of two regiments.) He was also before Port Hudson, and on one occasion was selected as bearer of dispatches to Baton Rouge, being obliged to ride through a guerilla-infested country. In 1864 he was appointed on Gen. Sheridan's staff, but being in command of two squadrons of his regiment the order was revoked at the request of his colonel.

He completed his medical studies, graduating from Harvard Medical School in 1866. After several years of mercantile life in direct connection with the medical profession, he became managing editor of the New York Medical Journal, which position he now holds.

Maj. H. W. Granger enlisted and was mustered into service in August, 1861, as first lieutenant in Company K, Lincoln Cavalry, at his home in Grand Rapids. This company was later transferred to the First New York Cavalry, which was the first cavalry regiment to enter the service. They did good service in the Army of the Potomac. In the fall of 1862 he was transferred to the Seventh Michigan Cavalry and promoted to first major.
This regiment was in Kilpatrick's division, and was in the battles of Antietam, Gettysburg, and many others.
While in Custer's division Maj. Granger was in command of the regiment, and on 11 May, 1864, was ordered with his command to charge a rebel battery at Yellow Tavern. In leading the charge he was killed, having received two bullets, one in the head and one in the region of the heart. He was brave to a fault, ever ready to lead or be led wherever his services were needed. He was a good citizen, a kind neighbor, a gallant soldier.

s. of Ralph; b. 17 May, 1819, at Granville, Ohio; d. 20 May, 1890, at Oroville, Cal.; m. 3 May, 1843, to Isabella, dau. of David Wilson and Jane Elliott of Freeport, Pa. She b. 10 Aug., 1825, and living at Oroville.

Lyman Cass Granger was born at the little city of Granville in Licking County, O., as above. He received his common school and academic education in his native town and at Kenyon College, Ohio, but entered Jefferson College in Pennsylvania with the junior class, and was graduated with the class of '38. Returning home he entered upon the study of the law with the Hon. William Stansbury, with whom he remained two years. He commenced the practice of his profession at Stoddard County, Mo., but illness soon forced him to seek again his old home. He accepted a position as instructor in Greek and Latin at Paris, Ky., where he remained two years, and then founded an Academy at Haysville, O., where he resided two years more. During this time he read theology, and for some years had charge of a Baptist church. He then removed to Hannibal, Mo., and for a time made that place his home.

It was while a resident of this last-named place that the excitement regarding California began, and the Plains began to be dotted with emigrants, taking the overland route to the newly-discovered gold fields. Mr. Granger determined to join the seekers after new lands and worlds, and, in the spring of 1849, betook himself to the rendezvous at Council Bluffs, Ia. With him went his young wife and their two children. The party consisted of one hundred persons, with twenty wagons, each drawn by six oxen, and plentifully supplied with cows, horses, dogs, and camp outfits. They started west across the trackless plains in the month of April. Until the mountains were reached the path was easy, but once the level plains were left, the little party plunged into hardships beyond the power of pen to describe. It was with the greatest difficulty that they traced their steps across the deserts of sand and through the snows of the mountain passes. Finally there arose disputes as to the proper direction to travel, and the party separated into two bands. That to which Mr. Granger belonged finally staggered, half dead with famine and fever, into the valley of Los Angeles, at San Bernardino ranch. Here plenty awaited them, and the native Mexicans fed and tended the party till all had recovered their strength and health. The party which had separated from them found some a grave in Deaths Valley; some fell by the wayside, while but a few reached at last the fair land of promise. It was late in October, 1849, before Mr. Granger and his little family escaped from the mountains to that peaceful valley.

Mr. Granger at once settled at Los Angeles, and commenced the practice of his profession. The times were wild, and men carried their arguments attached to the belt which encircled their waists. Mr. Granger followed the way of the country, and was known as a man of daring courage, ready to defend the right, according to the swift and fatal custom of the times. He was soon elected the district attorney; and as upon him fell the duties of prosecuting the criminals of that murderous section, his own position was one of more than ordinary danger. But his coolness and known courage carried him safely through the arduous duties of his office. It is estimated that there were at Los Angeles in those years, more desperadoes than at any other spot on the Pacific coast, San Francisco not excepted, and more on the coast than in any other one part of the known world. So dangerous was it for any one to be connected with the peace department of Los Angeles, that the office of sheriff, worth at least $10,000 a year, was vacant for a long period, no one being willing to accept the honors and emoluments together with the risks.

After leaving the public service Mr. Granger resumed the civil practice of the law. He found it necessary to become familiar with the Spanish language, since the most important litigation grew out of the Spanish land grants covering all that section of California. Mr. Granger was retained in much of the heaviest litigation, and his fees amounted to thousands of dollars. But he was a man of the greatest charity, and gave with the one hand what he earned with the other. As a result he never accumulated more than a modest competency, while he might have been worth thousands. He received many positions of trust and honor from the hands of the people with whom he lived. He was the first district attorney of Los Angeles County after the admission of the State to the Union. He was secretary to Gov. Downey, was elected to the California Legislature in 1882 and again in 1886, and at both sessions occupied a most important position. He was appointed by President Cleveland registrar of the land office at Maysville, which office he assumed 15 April, 1888, and retained until his death. His home was at Oroville.

Mr. Granger was a scholar with a distinctly philosophical mind. He loved to study best the philosophy of religion, and to him the beauties of God and his character were a never-failing source of pleasant contemplation. His last work, finished but shortly before his death, was entitled "The Philosophy of Evidence," and is a masterly presentation of the philosophy of the Christian religion. Generous and kind, gentle yet firm, his mind filled with his duties to his God and to his fellow men, it is not surprising that he left behind him a memory which is held in the most loving affection and fervent admiration, not only by his own family, but by all who knew him in the far-off land he made his home.

JAMES NATHANIEL GRANGER,
P. O., Niagara Falls, N. Y.

2004

s. of James N.; b. 6 July, 1845, at Providence, R. I.; m. 6 Feb., 1878, to Sara, dau. of the Rev. Worthington Smith, D.D., and Mary A. Little of St. Albans, Vt. She b. 25 Sept., 1851.

James N. Granger was born and educated in Providence. In 1864, while a student in Brown University, he accepted a commission in the Second Rhode Island Infantry, and joined the Sixth Corps in the Army of the Potomac. He served with his regiment in command of a company till it was mustered out 1 Aug., 1865. His health being seriously impaired he left the country, living for some years in Europe and Africa. Returning home, he sought a climate at St. Paul, Minn., in 1871, where he practiced law. His son becoming seriously ill, he threw up his practice in 1889 and remained with his child in Boston till his decease. Mr. Granger is now temporarily residing at Niagara Falls, N. Y. His permanent address is care of his brother, D. L. D. Granger, Providence.

P. O., Bronxville, Westchester County, N. Y.

s. of James N.; b. 22 Dec., 1847, at Providence, R. I.; m. Mary E. Newcomb of Nova Scotia.

Dr. William Davis Granger was educated at Providence and at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. He entered Williams College, and graduated in 1869. He then read medicine at Harvard Medical College and at Bellevue in New York city, and commenced the practice of his profession at Buffalo, N. Y. He soon determined to make a specialty of insanity, and became first assistant physician in the State Insane Asylum at Buffalo. Here he remained ten years, finding time to write and publish several works, now standard, bearing on his branch of the profession. In 1890 he purchased a large place on the outskirts of New York city near Mt. Vernon, and has there established a private hospital for the treatment of the insane, which is known as Vernon House.

P. O., North Yakima, Wash.

s. of Warren; b. 4 March, 1855, at Buffalo, N. Y.; m. 2 June, 1891, at North Yakima, Maud, dau. of James H. Thomas (b. 6 Jan., 1841) and Lucy B. Guyer (b. 11 April, 1850) of North Yakima. She b. 1 Jan., 1872, at Plattsburg, Mo.

Walter N. Granger spent his younger years at his home in Buffalo, removing to St. Paul, Minn., in 1882, where for a time he was connected with a large wholesale grocery house, finally having charge of its interests on the Pacific coast. In 1889 he began investigating the question of irrigating the desert lands of the Northwest, and finally in 1890 organized a company with nearly a million dollars capital to prosecute the work. Mr. Granger took personal charge of the undertaking, and is the general manager of the company. It owns several hundreds of thousands of acres, and is at present building canals by which they can be supplied with unlimited water. The headquarters of the company are at North Yakima, where Mr. Granger resides.

EDMUND W. GRANGER,
P. O., Buffalo, N. Y.

s. of Aaron; b. 9 Jan., 1832, at North Royalton, O.; m. 4 Dec., 1856, to Laura, dau. of Chandler Veber and Lydia Edgerton of North Royalton. She b. 3 Nov., 1840.

Edmund W. Granger commenced his business career in his native town of North Royalton, where he was for many years a merchant. Later he lived at Titusville, Pa., but in 1872 he removed to Buffalo, where, in connection with his brother, William H., he commenced the business of a wholesale grocer, the firm being Granger Bros. The success which attended the venture was marked, and he soon became one of the leading merchants of the city. A few years ago the firm was dissolved and Edmund formed the partnership now known as Granger & Co., composed of himself and his son-in-law, Mr. Wilson. He erected on Broadway the handsomest building in the city devoted to the wholesale trade, and here he is at present doing a large and growing business.

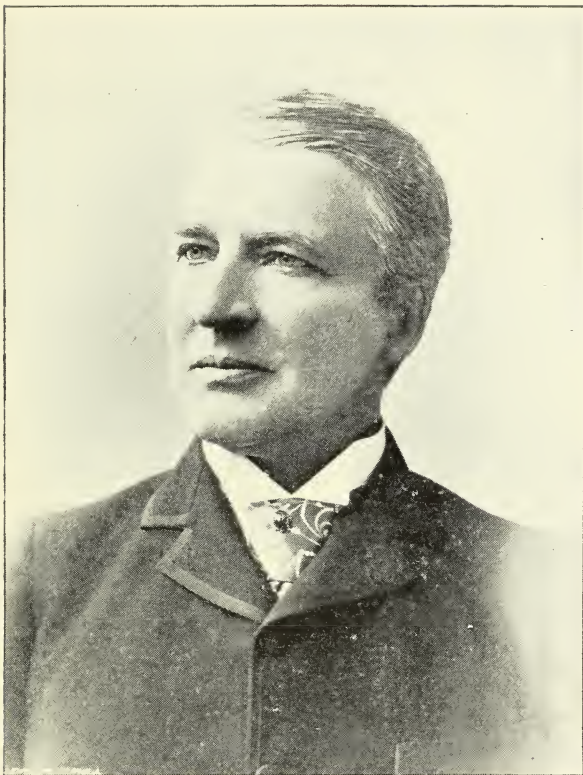

Mr. Granger lives in a charming house on North Street, and has taken a social position among the best in the city of his adoption. He is a member of Trinity Church, and has interested himself in many objects of public charity. He has made a name for himself, both in business and in private life, which is respected by all.

Mr. Granger came to Columbus when 14 years of age and settled on the farm on which he lived at the time of his death. For a time he read law, but ultimately turned his attention to farming, which business he followed the rest of his life. He gave much attention to public matters, and held many offices of trust in the town. He was generous to all and a friend to those in trouble, and hastened his death by taking a journey to assist one in trouble. He left a name which those who survive him will ever honor and cherish.

dau. of Oliver; b. 29 Dec., 1818, at Phelps, N. Y.; m. 22 Sept., 1840, to Hiram M., s. of Phineas Kimball and Abigail Colton of West Fairley, Vt. He b. 31 May, 1806; d. 1 May, 1863.

Could the life of Mrs. Kimball be written it would read like a romance, but filled with bitter trials and hardships. The daughter of a man high in the councils of the Mormon Church, and herself the wife of one of its most prominent leaders, she followed its varying course from the Temple at Kirkland, O., to the newer one at Nauvoo, Ill. Then, when driven from their second home, she accompanied her people in the eventful and tedious march across the trackless plains in search of another home where enemies would not find them. She settled in Salt Lake City when it was founded, and has made it her home ever since. She has taken an active part in all the charitable work of her church, and has been for a long time at the head of many of the women's departments organized for the relief of the helpless and needy. Mrs. Kimball is a woman of most tireless energy, and looks back upon a life in which many of its best hours have been devoted to helping others.

The accompanying picture of the home of Mrs. Kimball in Salt Lake City is of interest to all, as it was built when she and her husband first reached their new settlement, and is typical of the houses first built there by the Mormons. It is an adobe house, which has, during later years, been covered with plaster. Many years ago the original dirt roof was replaced by shingles. In the center of the house is a large court. The building seen on the extreme right is not a part of the house.

CHARLES T. GRANGER,

P. O., Waukon, Allemake Co., Ia.

s. of Trumbull; b. 9 Oct., 1835, in Monroe County, N. Y.; m. (1) 16 Oct., 1854, to Sarah H., dau. of A. Warner of Antioch, Ill. (she b. 2 March, 1835; d. 2 Jan., 1862, at Mitchell, Ia.), (2) 17 April, 1868, Anna, dau. of James Maxwell of Waukon. She d. 17 Aug., 1890.

The Hon. Charles Trumbull Granger, one of the justices of the supreme court of Iowa, was born as above in Monroe County, N. Y. His father was a man of great physical strength and superior intellectual power, fond of debate with his neighbors, farmers like himself. The subjects in which he seemed to take the most interest were relative to political questions. He was early deprived of the advice and help which only a fond mother can bestow. Upon her death he went to reside for some time with a brother-in-law who lived in Huron County, O., his father having in the meantime removed to Kirtland, O., the seat of the Mormon Church. At the age of 13 he ran away from home to avoid the chastisement which he justly deserved. In the absence of a mother's restraint he had become somewhat unruly and little disposed to obey the authority of his relatives. Like many restive young men, he came West.

Up to this period his educational advantages had been limited, and even then not well improved. As he grew older he felt the need of a better education and sought to improve the educational advantages already awakening in the new life and ambitions. He entered the academy at Waukon, Ill., to which place he had drifted after his flight from home. There he acquired a good knowledge of the common English branches, such as were taught at the academy of that period. In the fall of 1854 he removed to Allamakee County, Ia., and engaged in the avocation followed by so many young men—teaching school. He taught school through the winter and spring. In the summer he returned to Waukon and entered the academy, where he spent a few months in studying. He worked on a farm near Waukon and devoted his leisure hours to the study of law, borrowing books from the lawyers in the town. In March, 1856, he returned to Allamakee County, where he entered upon the systematic reading and study of law with Messrs. Hatch & Wilber of Waukon, and at the close of the year was admitted to the bar. In the office of these gentlemen he received most substantial encouragement, and he looks back with pleasure to this period and the instruction received from these gentlemen and for their precepts in qualifying him for his chosen profession. He won most deserved and honorable success. Before engaging actively in the practice of law he taught school a while in Mitchell County, and was elected county superintendent of schools in 1861.

Like many young men of that day he listened to the call of patriotism and enlisted in the army, and was chosen captain of Company K, Twenty-seventh Iowa Infantry. As a soldier and officer he was popular with the men of his command. His superior knowledge of the duties of his profession caused him to be often called to act as judge advocate. He was appointed assistant adjutant-general, in which position he served to the close of the war.

Returning to his old home at Waukon he formed a partnership with his old preceptor, L. O. Hatch, in January, 1866. After three years of successful practice he was appointed district attorney for the tenth judicial district, made vacant by the resignation of his partner. At a general election in 1869 he was elected to fill the unexpired term, and reelected for the succeeding term of four years, but before the expiration of the term he was elected judge of the tenth judicial district. Much against his tastes and inclinations, he was in 1874 made the nominee of his party (the Republican) for Congress in the third district. His tastes were judicial rather than forensic, and his inclinations did not lead him to seek a seat in the national Congress. He was defeated by the small majority of 63 votes. Two years later he was reelected to the bench of the district without opposition, such was the confidence the opposite party (Democratic) had in his integrity and capacity. To this office he was four times elected, and resigned upon his election to the supreme bench 1 Jan., 1889, for a term of six years. In this honorable position he acquitted himself with credit, highly esteemed by his associates of the bar. Considering its humble beginning, Judge Granger's career has been remarkable. His success as district attorney, although with but little experience in the profession, was so marked that it led to his nomination for the judgeship.

He was a careful judge, and carried this principle of carefulness into everyday affairs of life. He was a gentleman of quiet demeanor; his court was always a model of dignity and propriety, his judicial decisions having been generally correct and often able and always in harmony with justice.

Judge Granger has been married twice. Both his wives are dead; also his daughter, Ula A., a lovely young maiden verging into womanhood, who had become her father's housekeeper after the death of her mother. The son (a boy of 17), Rolla S., is attending college at Des Moines, to which place his father has moved in order to have the son with him, and to give him collegiate advantages afforded by the capital city.

A year or two after attaining his majority he was made a Mason in Antioch Lodge, Antioch, Ill., 1860, and after coming to Waukon he affiliated with Waukon Lodge 154, in which he still holds membership. To the mastership of this lodge he has been repeatedly elected and served the craft to their great satisfaction. Representing his lodge in the grand lodge he early attracted the attention of his brother masons by his readiness in debate, his thorough knowledge of Masonry and its laws. He was elected by the grand lodge at the next session as grand senior deacon, and was advanced to senior warden, which position he held for two years, and at the annual communication in 1884 was elected grand master of Masonry in Iowa. He was elected for the existing year to this high position, and in this office, as in one of inferior grade, he won confidence and credit. He is a good ritualist, but a much more sound jurist in Masonic jurisprudence. A ready debater on the floor, he presides with dignity, and commands respect and universal love and honor. He became a Royal Arch Mason in April, 1869, in Markwell Chapter No. 30, at Lansing, Ia., and still remains a member. He received the order of Christian Knighthood at Beausant Com-mandery No. 12, Decorah, Ia., in September, 1883, with which he still remains connected.

To the Masonic period of the symbolic degrees he is more devoted, as in them he finds a wider field for study and research, and in the foundation of the system that have been brought to bear upon it.

In the private walks of life and his associations with friends and gentlemen at large the judge holds the respect of all by his winning manner and his upright life and his general information upon the topics of the world. A warm and devoted friend, and he has few, if any, enemies. Domestic affliction and sorrow have weighed heavily upon him, and with the increased labors of his office have begun to tell on his physical strength, and he is now resting awhile from his labors, hoping to restore his health to its normal state, in which we trust he may be long permitted to officiate in the duties and labors of his office. in the class of 1845. He was at once commissioned a brevet second lieutenant in the Second Infantry, and the next year transferred to the mounted rifles, a regiment organized to protect the overland trail to Oregon. At the beginning of the Mexican war he accompanied this regiment to Mexico. The horses were all lost in the gulf during transit, and the regiment was ordered to serve on foot. From Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico Lieut. Granger was in every battle, and always distinguished for his coolness and courage. At Cerro Gordo, Contreras, and the assault on Chapultepec he was conspicuous for his gallant conduct, and was highly complimented in the reports. He was breveted a captain for his gallant conduct at Chapultepec. After the war he served with the regiment in Oregon, Texas, and New Mexico until the secession troubles began, much of the time being in active service against the Indians, who were especially troublesome. During this time he visited Europe, where he staid a year.

In 1861 he was on sick leave in New York, but reported for duty as soon as the first gun was fired, and for a time served with McClellan in Ohio, organizing troops for service. In June he reported at Fort Leavenworth with recruits for the field, and there remained as adjutant-general of the forces collected to repel Gen. Price. From Leavenworth to Wilson's Creek, Gen. Granger was assistant adjutant-general to Maj. Sturgis, in command of the right wing of Gen. Lyon's army. In September, 1861, he was commissioned colonel of the Second Michigan Cavalry, and brigadier-general in March, 1862. He took a prominent part in the operations of Gen. Pope's army about New Madrid and Island No. 10, and afterward about Corinth. He was in command at Franklin, Tenn., until June, 1863, when he commanded the force that during Gen. Rosecrans's advance so summarily threw Wheeler's cavalry into the Duck River near Shelbyville on 27 June.

Possibly the most important and brilliant event of his life was his timely relief of General Thomas at the battle of Chickamauga in 1863. The story was well told at the time in the New York Herald:

“Gen. Thomas, near the center of the army, was engaged about one o'clock sitting on his horse in the hollow of a ridge in an open field behind Harker's brigade, busy watching a heavy cloud of dust in his rear, in such a direction that it might be Gen. Granger with reinforcements, or it might be the enemy. It cast a cloud over his spirits, which was plainly visible to one who observed him, as I confess I did that day, with ever-increasing admiration. The truth is, that Gen. Thomas at one o'clock p. m., on the last day of this battle had no disposition to fight any more, and feared the result of the next rebel attack. And so he watched with natural anxiety the development of the cloud of dust, which was then no more than a mile distant. If it dissolved to reveal friends, then they would be welcome; for at this hour fresh friends were all that was needed. If it disclosed the enemy, then the day was lost, and it became the duty of those who formed the 'last square' on this battle-field to throw into the teeth of the victorious enemy a defiance as grandly contemptuous as that of Cambronne, and die. There was no escape if the troops moving were the cavalry of the enemy.

“Take my glass, some one of you whose horse stands steady. Tell me what you see.”

“In the dust that emerged, thick as the clouds that precede the storm, nothing could be distinguished but a moving mass of men. But it was seen that they were infantry. This information made Thomas breathe more freely. If infantry, it was much more likely to be Granger than the enemy. At this moment a tall officer, with the yellow strap of a captain of cavalry, presented himself to Gen. Thomas.

“‘General,’ he said, ‘I am cut from Gen. Negley, and cannot find him. I beg leave to report to you for duty, sir, of any character.’”

“‘Capt. Johnson,’ said the General to the speaker (Capt. Johnson, Second Indiana Cavalry, inspector-general on Gen. Negley's Staff), ride over there, and report to me who and what that force is.’”

“In an instant Johnson was gone—gone upon a mission which proved itself to be a more dangerous one than any of us supposed. As he emerged slowly from a dense foliage of willows growing about a narrow stream in the rear we heard the report of several rifles, and saw him halt for a second, and then, dashing spurs to his horse, disappear in a thick wood in the direction of the coming mass of troops still enveloped in clouds of dust. In a few minutes he again emerged from this timber, and following him came the red, white, and blue crescent-shaped battle-flag of Gordon Granger. We had wished for night, and it was Blucher who had come to us. At a quarter past one, Steadman first, and Gordon Granger afterward, had wrung the hand of the statue Thomas, who had gone all through the terrible scenes of the last two days' battle to be melted and moved at this hour. As Granger came up I felt that from the face of the heavens a great cloud had passed, and the sun was shining once more upon us as with the same benignant rays of former victories."

Gen. Rosecrans says that Gen. Thomas, who never flattered mortal man, said to him in Gen. Granger's presence after the battle of Chickamauga, "General, this is the man that saved me."

In the reorganization of the Army of the Cumberland Gen. Granger was assigned to the command of the Fourth Corps. Gen. Wood's and Gen. Sheridan's divisions of that corps were distinguished for the part they took in the battle of Missionary Ridge. Early in 1864 he was relieved from command of this corps and proceeded East.

In July of that year he reported in person to the commanding officer at New Orleans, and was sent in command of the expedition to Mobile Bay. Here the navy under Farragut joined him, and the siege of Mobile began. Granger invested and took Fort Gaines with all its force. Soon afterward Fort Morgan surrendered. Gen. Granger here proposed a movement which, had it been followed, would, as subsequently discovered facts showed, have caused the immediate surrender of Mobile. But he was overruled by his superior officer, and the long and bloody siege of the city followed. He moved his troops, now formed into the Thirteenth Army Corps, to the east side of the bay, and Spanish Fort was invested. After a long siege this was taken and the road opened into Mobile. Gen. Granger at once started his troops for the city, and taking himself a small steamboat steamed directly for the wharves. The inhabitants, knowing the bay to be filled with torpedoes, watched to see the boat go up, and as it touched the dock he was asked why he escaped. He answered quietly, "I had the fellow who planted the torpedoes in the pilot house."

The war having closed, Gen. Granger proceeded to Texas, and in June, 1865, assumed command at Galveston. Thence his headquarters were removed to Houston, where he made himself accessible to all, and lent counsel and assistance in the transition from slave to free labor. That critical period was passed without disturbance, which was flattering to his wisdom and prudence. The length of his stay in Texas was two months; the provisional government was established in August, and Gen. Mower arrived to relieve Granger. He then served in Tennessee and New Mexico, and while colonel of the Fifteenth United States Infantry, died suddenly at Santa Fé, N. M., of apoplexy, on the evening of the 10 Jan., 1876.

Gen. Granger was a natural soldier. He knew not fear; he did not fight for glory or rank, but from the pure love of it. To his men he was kind and considerate, never asking them to go where he was unwilling to lead, and thus securing their love and unbounded respect. After the war he became a communicant of the Episcopal Church, and was extremely devout. The quietness of army life after the bustle of active war led him to idleness and apathy. It needed the boom of cannon to arouse Gordon Granger; then he became a great soldier, with a quick eye to measure the possibilities of the battlefield, and a will to carry out the most daring plan. He left a name and a record of which all who bear the same name can well be proud.

Mrs. Winthrop left in the city of her adoption a memory which will always be fragrant as long as the noble charities with which she was connected shall survive. Permitted by her high social position and her ample means to lead in matters of benevolence, she gave freely of her time and money for the good of others. The Children's Hospital of Boston, an institution where the little ones from equally the richer and the poorer walks of life came for treatment, was her especial pride; and during the last years of her life she was mainly instrumental in erecting the Convalescent Home connected with the hospital in the neighboring town of Wellesley. By a strange coincident the dedication of this new charity, in providing which she had been the leader, took place on the very day of her death, thus seemingly rounding out to the full a life devoted to good works.

s. of Francis; b. 30 Aug., 1821, at Canandaigua, N. Y.; d. 3 Sept., 1868, at Canandaigua; m. 1850 to Isaphine, dau. of Isaac Pierson (b. 31 Dec., 1770; d. 27 Sept., 1848, at Canandaigua) of New York city.

Mr. Granger was born at Canandaigua, as above. Like his father and grandfather, he was graduated at Yale College, being in the class of 1843. Like them, too, he was educated to the law, but from the outset of his career he devoted his professional labors, as indeed he did his whole life, to the service of the poor and needy. During the late civil war he served as chairman of the war committee, and few persons anywhere did more than he toward filling up the ranks of the regiments or providing for the families of the soldiers. The widows and orphans of those who had fallen in the field were peculiarly his care, and he spared neither strength nor substance in affording them relief. Wherever, indeed, there was any good work to be done in the community of which he was a member Gideon Granger was foremost in doing it, actuated by the precepts and example of that Saviour to whose cause he had consecrated himself. A contemporaneous writer says:

“Occupying socially a high position, reared in a family of singularly pure and refined culture, his associations among the educated and higher classes, it would most naturally seem that his tastes and sympathies would all be with them; but such was not the case. His sympathies were with all, and his great heart loved all, and there were none in all the community whom his quiet eye did not see and his kind and genial affection run out after to do them good. With the culture of a college education, and a lawyer by profession, he turned from the track of his professional brethren and gave himself from the first to that work which, while it carries untold comfort to others, brought no remuneration but thanks and weariness.

“It was during the recent war that Mr. Granger’s noble qualities shone most bright. With earnestness and devotion he gave himself to the aid of our country in peril. He visited all parts of the county and pleaded for men and for money to fill up the ranks of our soldiers. As chairman of the committee for providing for the families of the soldiers, he took these families into his immediate charge and gave them most timely and abundant aid from his own means.

“Mr. Granger was not ambitious for political honors, and invariably refused to accept a nomination for any office which would take him from his home, although it was repeatedly offered to him. He twice served the town as supervisor and twice was president of the board of trustees of the village, in both of which positions his administration was eminently successful.”

After the close of the war Mr. Granger resumed the practice of his profession, which he continued at Canandaigua till his death. But he was already struggling with the disease which finally proved too strong for him. All that the will of a strong man could do to sustain himself in such a time was seen in Mr. Granger. But after a final struggle, which showed his deep Christian character, he died, mourned and lamented by his neighbors as few men have ever been. Less than a week after his father had been laid away under the green turf of his Canandaigua grave the son followed him to his last and final resting place.

The family of Mr. Granger still reside at Canandaigua.

N. Y., then removed to Trenton, N. J., and finally removed back to Palmyra. E. D. Townsend was the son of the Rev. John Townsend (Yale, 1790), who was well known throughout Ontario and Wayne Counties, N. Y. She b. at Palmyra.

J. Albert Granger (as he writes his name) was graduated at Yale with the class of '55, and studied law with Smith & Lapham at Canandaigua. For some years after his admission to the bar of New York he practiced his profession in the village where he was born. In 1880 he removed to New York, where he interested himself in the purchase and sale of lands, giving much attention to property in the southern states. His office is in the Mills' building on Broad Street. From 1862 to 1868 he was engineer of the Seventh division of the National Guards, State of New York, with the rank of colonel. He wrote and published a history of Canandaigua, a task which he had special facilities to do.

Mr. Granger is the present male representative of the Canandaigua Grangers, and a gentleman who well maintains the reputation for honor and integrity for which his branch was ever famous. He is, together with his sons, a member of the New York society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

 and Abigail Lowe of Albany, N. Y.

John T. Granger was educated at the Zanesville (O.)
 public schools, graduating from the High school in 1866 at the head of his class. During his school days he had devoted considerable study to phonography, and, without any assistance other than the books, had made himself a good reporter. His first employment was as teacher of penmanship in the Zanesville public schools. From this he went into the railway service as chief clerk in the auditor's office of the Cincinnati & Muskingum Valley Railroad Company, but soon tiring of the confinement he sought his fortune in the West, where knowledge of stenography was especially valuable. He worked at Sparta, Oshkosh, Janesville, Wis., and Chicago, Ill., coming East in 1869 to Washington to assist in reporting the "Ku Klux" trials. Later he was employed in the Interior department. In 1872 his health gave way, and he left Washington and became the private secretary of Gen. G. M. Dodge, now of New York city, well known as one of the greatest railroad builders in the country. He went with Gen. Dodge to Texas, there beginning what is known as the "Gould system" of railroads, and, with only a very short interval, has been associated with him in the construction of roads ever since. Mr. Granger has charge of the financial departments, and is now treasurer of the Fort Worth & Denver railroad, the Denver, Texas & Fort Worth railroad, the St. Louis, Des Moines & Northern railroad, and the Pan Handle railroad. He is also a part-

Miles T. Granger was born on a farm in New Marlborough in the Berkshire hills of Massachusetts. Early in life he became dependent on his own exertions, and while a mere boy began to work in a woolen mill, receiving as wages 12½ cents a day. Two years afterward he "hired out" to a farmer in Norfolk, Ct., and his services were compensated by a daily payment of 25 cents. He continued at farm work until 1833, when he decided to teach school. To prepare himself for this vocation he entered the office of Dr. Benjamin Welch of Norfolk, and after severe study in the autumn of the same year passed an examination and was engaged as a teacher at $12.50 a month. In 1838 he gave up school teaching for a time and entered a seminary to pursue its advanced course. During his second term the principal of the seminary advised his young pupil to prepare for college, and he entered the freshman class of Wesleyan University at Middletown, Ct., in August, 1839. Being without means to pay tuition, he was allowed during his college career to teach school during part of the time, and by hard work reduced his college term, being graduated in 1842. In 1843 he went to Mississippi as a tutor in a private family, where he also read law, being admitted to the bar in 1845. Returning to Connecticut in 1847 he opened a law office at Canaan, where he has ever since practiced law, save while holding office. He was elected judge of probate in 1849, and held the office nearly all the time until he was elected judge of the superior court. In 1857 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives of Connecticut, and in 1866 made State senator. The same year he was elected judge of the superior court, which office he held for eight years, being then reelected. In 1876 he was elected judge of the supreme court of errors of Connecticut. He remained on the bench of the highest court of the State until 1 March, 1887, when he resigned to accept a seat in the national House of Representatives, to which he had been elected in the November preceding. This election to political office had come to Judge Granger unsolicited, and was given as a token of esteem to one who had reached the age when by the law of the State he must retire from the bench. His district naturally belonged to the political party opposed to the judge, but his personal popularity and worth gave him the victory at the polls.

At the close of his congressional term Judge Granger declined a renomination, which was unanimously tendered him, and withdrew to the quiet and pleasures of home life at Canaan. Here he still lives, honored and respected by his neighbors and associates.

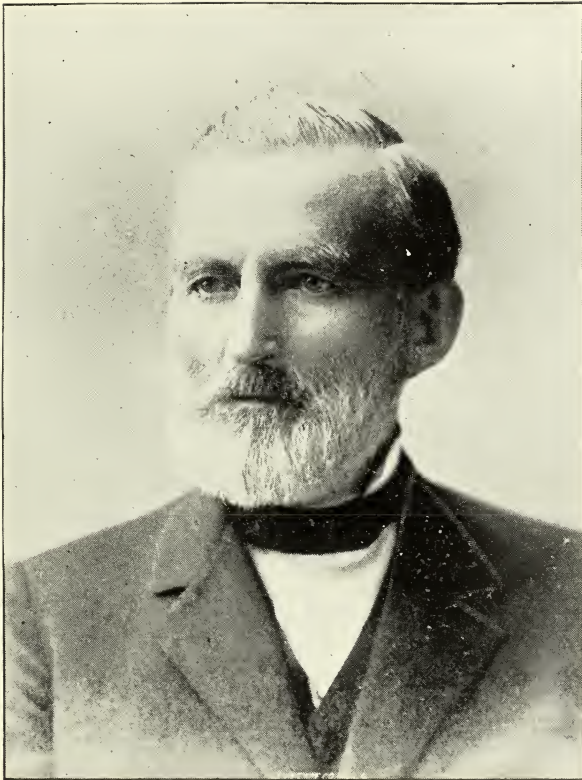

Judge Granger is a thoroughly self-made man, and he loves to tell that every dollar which he has ever had, save one, he has earned. When a boy his father gave him a bright silver dollar, and this was his entire legacy, patrimony, and outfit for his battle with the world.

Mr. Granger was one of the first to enlist from Connecticut in the late war, being a member of the Second Connecticut Infantry, commanded by the late Maj.-Gen. Alfred H. Terry. Later he reënlisted for the war in the Nineteenth Connecticut, which in 1863 was changed to the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery. He was present at the battle of Bull Run, and for some time after was stationed in the defenses about Washington.

In 1864 his regiment became a part of the First Division, Sixth Corps, and with the Army of the Potomac he engaged in all the battles it fought till the war closed. He was with Sheridan in the campaign in the Shenandoah Valley in the autumn of 1864, and was promoted to the command of Company E for meritorious services at Cedar Creek. During all the battles from the beginning of the campaign in the Wilderness to the fight at Cedar Creek he was first sergeant of his company, and never once missed calling his roll at the proper time. Though constantly in the front line of battle he was never wounded, though his clothes were sometimes riddled with bullets. After the return of his corps to Petersburg he took part in all the engagements about that town, and was present at the surrender of Gen. Lee.

At the close of the war he returned to Winsted and became connected with the New England Pin Company, with which he remained 22 years; he is now the treasurer of the Morgan Silver Plate Company.

He is a member of the Masonic lodge (St. Andrew, No. 64) and of Meridian Chapter, No. 15. He is a Mason of the thirty-second degree. He is also a member of the grand lodge of Odd Fellows, grand regent of the grand council of Connecticut Royal Arcanum, a member of the supreme lodge of the New England Order of Protection and at present the treasurer of its grand lodge, an officer

WILLIAM R. GRANGER.

No. 4499.

William Rowen Granger, after a common school education, began business at the age of 13, entering the dry goods store of Townsend Sharpless in Philadelphia. Here his sterling qualities were appreciated, and when quite a young man he was sent to Europe by his house to buy dress goods. From that time his judgment and capacity as a dry goods buyer were firmly established. He entered the army in 1862 with the Keystone Artillery, honorably serving the full term of his enlistment.

After the war he became a member of the wholesale dry goods house of Crowell & Granger, and afterward established the house of Granger & Townsend, which later became William R. Granger & Co. When the house of Wood, Brown & Co. was formed in 1886 Mr. Granger assumed charge of their most important department (dress goods) and remained with them up to his death. He suffered from Bright's disease, and while on a trip to Paris in 1891 he had a slight stroke of paralysis, and reached home only to die.

He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, the Union League of Philadelphia, a devoted member of the Northminster Presbyterian Church, and a teacher in its Sunday-school. His widow and family continue to reside in Philadelphia.

s. of Arthur; b. 14 Feb., 1846, at Providence, R. I.; m. 15 Aug., 1870, to Caroline Dickson, dau. of Henry Duval Gregory (b. 17 Sept., 1819) and Mary Jones (b. 9 Dec., 1824, at Manchester, Eng.; d. 21 May, 1888) of Philadelphia, Pa. She b. 28 Aug., 1850.

Arthur Otis Granger enlisted for "the war" on the 8 Sept., 1862, in "The Anderson Troop," so called, a regiment composed of many of the best young men of Philadelphia, Pa. They joined the army under Gen. Rosecrans in the West, and went into their first fight at Stone River in December, 1862. After a time he became a clerk at the headquarters of Gen. Elliott, chief of cavalry in Gen. Sherman's army, and later was transferred upon telegraphic orders to the headquarters of Gen. Sherman himself. With him he remained and accompanied him to Atlanta and on the famous "March to the Sea." After the grand review at Washington he was mustered out, but still continued with Gen. Sherman at St. Louis while he was making out his report of his campaign.

Mr. Granger then settled in Philadelphia, where he has many interests. He also has a house at Cartersville, Ga., where he spends part of his time, looking after his business interests there. At present (1893) he has business at Montreal, Can., also, where his address is No. 2, St. James St.
